HE DID HIS BEST.

"Halloo, Charley, wake up! Don't lie there like a somnolent log!"

But Charley Evans only responded with a succession of convulsive sneezes and groans.

"Cold in the head, eh? Never mind it—up with you!"

"Up indeed, with knifelike pains shooting up and down every joint in a fellow's body, and his head feeling as if a hundredweight of lead were tied to every individual hair."

"Remember your engagements, Charley. Remember that the girls expect every young man to do his duty this splendid day."

Mr. Evans groaned.

"Ralph, your list of visits is comparatively small; you must go and make my apologies."

"Well, agreed. But first let me give you a cup of coffee."

"Never mind," groaned Charley. "What was I going to say? Oh, you must go and see Flora Howard for me. I told her last night that I should have something very particular to say to her today, and she'll think it a purposed affront if she hears nothing from me."

"What shall I tell her—that you have a woeful cold in the head?"

"Nonsense. Just explain matters to her and say that—that—in short, convey to her the idea that I love her and ask her if she will have me."

"Rather an awkward message for a third person to carry. Hadn't you better wait until you can plead your own cause in propria persona?"

"No, no—it's a question that admits of no delay. There are a dozen beaux flirting round her the whole time, and it won't do to lose my prize for lack of decision. Just act as my proxy, Ralph. I know she will say yes."

"On my soul, Charley, I wish you wouldn't send me on this particular errand. Can't you find some other messenger?"

"Oh, I understand what you mean," said Evans, tossing restlessly on his pillow. "I know you were rather an admirer of Flora's at one time, but you must be aware that you never had any chance in that quarter. Don't be selfish—and, besides, I would rather send an honest, stupid sort of a fellow like you than any one else. No offense, Ralph, I hope?"

"Oh, no; of course not," said Ralph Brewster demurely, shrugging his shoulders. "Well, I'll do my best."

As Ralph Brewster walked rapidly along the ice glazed pavements he could not help mentally reverting to the gentleman he had left behind him.

"Pretty cool, I must say!" he remarked to himself. "I've seen a good many evidences of Charley Evans' selfishness, but this is the most convincing of all. Does he suppose I have no feelings? And then his calm way of taking it for granted that Flora Howard is dying for him. I'd rather undergo the rack than to do Charley's courting for him—but I mustn't indulge these lachrymose sensations."

The slanting afternoon beams peeping into Charley Evans' invalid chamber played all sorts of merry pranks around his disheveled hair and restless head, and finally creeping up the wall vanished away into the purple mysteries of twilight—and Ralph Brewster did not appear to report progress.

Charley grew impatient. It isn't particularly favorable to an angelic disposition to have a cold in your head, with aching bones and quivering nerves and a cranium throbbing as if somebody was trying to split it apart with a dull hatchet.

Nine, 10, 11 o'clock sounded on his strained ear, and still Ralph's familiar footstep had not fallen on the stair. What could have delayed him?

And while he was revolving probabilities and possibilities in his weary brain Morpheus considerately came to the rescue, and he fell asleep to dream of standing before the altar with Flora Howard.

It was on the evening of the third day from this eventful first that Charles Evans sat before his fire, very cross because the doctor had prohibited his going out for a day or two.

Suddenly the door was flung open, and Ralph Brewster burst in.

"Halloo, old fellow. How are you? Surprised at my nonappearance, eh? Well, here I am to make all the necessary apologies and explanations."

Charley held out his hand with a lazy acquiescence in whatever might befall that was worthy of a nobler cause.

"Well, Charley, I went to see Flora, as you wished me to."

"Did you?" said Charley, rather brightening up. "What did she say?"

"Why, I commenced by making all apologies for your absence—which, by the way, didn't seem to affect her very powerfully—and then I played offhand into the love subject."

"Well?" demanded Charley eagerly.

"The strangest part of the matter was that she didn't understand me, but seemed to imagine that I was making love for myself—and before I could explain she had hidden her pretty face on my shoulder and confessed in the sweetest words woman ever faltered forth that my sentiment was not altogether unreturned!"

Charles Evans turned very red, sprang up, and then changed his mind and sat down again.

"Well—what next?"

"Why, you can imagine the delighted perplexity of my position. Of course, I couldn't bawl out, 'You're mistaken in the individual, Miss Flora—I am only courting in behalf of Charley Evans; now, could I?'"

Charley Evans stared fixedly at his friend, but made no answer. Ralph went on:

"So, when I discovered that the brightest dream of my life—hitherto deemed as visionary and unapproachable as the very stars of heaven—was a blessed reality, I accepted the priceless treasure with the resolution to deserve it if possible. And as she was annoyed by the importunities of one or two wealthy suitors, who were favored by her parents, I concluded that the sooner matters were brought to a crisis the better. So we quietly slipped away and got married the selfsame evening! And now I claim your congratulations!"

Charley elaborately pulled out his pocket handkerchief, but not as his alarmed friend imagined to give way to a burst of vain tears, merely to sneeze!

"Well, Ralph," said he composedly, when that operation was safely over, "you're a lucky fellow, and I'm not sure, after all, but that you deserve it."

"And you will come to visit Flora and myself in a friendly way?"

"As soon as I'm able to go out. Please to hand me that bowl of tea."—Boston Globe.

It is intended especially for colds, croup and whooping cough." 50 cent bottles for sale by Ashland Drug Co.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The G. O. M. of the republican party of Pennsylvania is evidently Galusha A. Grow, who floated into a vacant candidacy for the Fifty-third congress by the unanimous vote of his constituents after he had been out of politics for 18 years. In 1876 Mr. Grow refused the Russian mission, which of itself was an uncommonly strong minded act. Standing tall, erect and with flashing eye, without a sign of physical weakness or failing about him, as he appeared in the convention that recently nominated him, it was hard to believe that this man had been speaker of the house of representatives at the memorable session of congress which met July 4, 1861, suddenly summoned to take measures for the preservation of the Union. Yet such was the fact. Mr. Grow is 71 years old. He began political life very early, which makes him seem to the younger generation about 90 years old. But he is only 70 and remarkably vigorous and well preserved. He was elected first to the Thirty-second congress in 1850 and was the youngest member of that body. From the Thirty second congress in 1851 to the Fifty-third in 1893 4 is a long stretch. This will make the seventh congress of which Mr. Grow has been a member.

The board of education of San Francisco is making an active crusade against the cigarette habit in school boys. Dr. Clinton, a physician of that city who has made a special study of the matter, says that fifty per cent of the public school boys smoke cigarettes; that it is as bad as the indulgence in opium; that it makes liars and thieves of lads naturally honest, blunts the whole moral nature and induces consumption. Prominent men in all walks of life are speaking out and without exception condemn the habit. The principals and teachers in numerous schools and the president of half a dozen colleges all testify that boys who smoke cigarettes do not and can not keep up with their classmates not given to that practice. The president of Stanford university says that after a lifelong connection with young men in college he has never known an inveterate user of cigarettes to rise to any position of prominence. His observation has been that most of them go dragging through life and fade into early graves.

Prineville Review: Towns in the Willamette valley that have been going ahead of their resources have begun to realize that the practice of a little economy is an absolute necessity these hard times, and are beginning to cut down expenses by reducing officers' salaries and retiring unnecessary officials. Prineville realized this fact several years ago, and the economy that has been practiced by the council has prevented the necessity of levying a tax since 1888. Since then all expenses of the town government have been paid out of the fines and licenses collected.

The private railway carriage in which Mrs. Mackay travels on the continent cost $300,000 and is fitted up in the most luxurious fashion. The milliners, the washerwomen, the book-keepers, the school teachers, the flotsam and jetsam of the middle and poorer life in California and Nevada paid for that car. Oh, how the suckers did bite in those olden, golden days of the Comstock!—[Sacramento Bee.

The way she looks troubles the woman who is delicate, run down or overworked. She's hollow-cheeked, dull-eyed, thin and pale, and it worries her. Now, the way to look well is to be well. And the way to be well, if you're any such woman, is to faithfully use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. That is the only medicine that's guaranteed to build up woman's strength and to cure woman's ailments. In every "female complaint," irregularity or weakness, and in every exhausted condition of the female system—if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Better Than the Genuine.

Cincinnati, Jan. 31.—Today it was found that counterfeit silver dollars made of pure silver, and of a quality better than the genuine, were afloat in the local market. Aside from a slight flaw in the milling, the coin cannot be told from the genuine. The government authorities but recently broke up an alleged den of counterfeiters in the bottoms, and several suspects are now in jail awaiting trial. At the present price of silver, about $1.000 can be made at a cost of about $650.

For pains in the chest there is nothing better than a flannel cloth saturated with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It will produce a counter irritat on without blistering, and is not so disagreeable as mustard; in fact is much superior to any plaster on account of its pain-relieving qualities. If used in time it will prevent pneumonia. 50 cent bottles for sale by Ashland Drug Co.

Republican Gains.

New York, Jan. 30.—The special election for two congressmen in the fourteenth and fifteen districts resulted in the election of one democrat and one republican.

New York, Jan. 31. Complete unofficial figures of yesterday's election in the 14th congressional district give Quigg, rep., 984 plurality, a republican gain of 9869. In the 15th district, Straus, dem., had a plurality of 4687, a republican gain of 7182. Many democrats did not go to polls.
