THE TINYMITES

STORY by HAL COCHRAN—PICTURES by KNICK

READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE

One Tiny shouted, "This is heck to hang here on this big bird's neck. I fear that I will lose my hold and topple down through space. If he should hang his head down low, good-bye to me, 'cause off I'd go. I certainly was foolish when I picked this crazy place."

"Hush up," another loudly cried. "I, too, am trying to save my hide. I'm clinging to a long leg on this wobbly Goofygoo. And worst of all, he won't hold still. Already I have had my fill of flying through the air like this, but what else can I do?"

The cabin, which was still in place, despite the wild and speedy race, began to teeter to and fro. It seemed 'twas doomed to fall. The bird tried hard to hold it straight, but wind, that blew at mighty gait, made this act quite impossible. It was no use at all.

The Goofygoo then shouted, "Hey! You Tinies keep out of the way. Don't let the cabin hit you as it slides off of my back. It's bound to whirl around and 'round until it lands upon the ground. And, if it hits you, passing by, 'twill be an awful smack."

A mighty puff of wind then came. What happened really was a shame. The little cabin toppled and went whizzing down through space. Said Coppy, "What will that be worth, when once it hits the hard, hard earth. I wish 'twould hit a haystack. That would be a nice soft place."

Then Scouty cried, "Gee, that's too bad. To lose our cabin's rather sad. Let's all go down to earth and see if it is worthless now." "All right," replied the Goofygoo. "That is exactly what we'll do. The trip may be a long one, but we'll soon get there somehow."

(The Tinies find their cabin in the next story.)
