CHINESE GIRLS FACE MORALS CRUSADE

HONGKONG, May 6.—(AP)—Authorities took steps today to protect Chinese morals from American influence.

A book stall proprietor was fined for selling risque American magazines.

The Canton provincial authorities also began a more strict enforcement of dress laws under which the appearance of bare arms and legs was banned.

A dozen girls were arrested as they went to a motion picture show, the police ordering them to go home and dress according to the law or go to jail.

The girls, defiant, went to jail and fellow students threatened to go on strike in sympathy.

Canton provincial authorities have been trying for two or three years to institute dress reforms among young Chinese women who, they alleged, modeled their clothes on what they see in American motion pictures.

Many of them have discarded the traditional trousers for skirts. They wear anklets for sports just as their American sisters do. Instead of long, flowing sleeves, they are likely to appear bare-armed.

The Chinese officials who constitute the authorities of Canton do not like it.

By Canton provincial law, native materials must be used, modeled on traditional lines.
