Lives Like Pauper, Leaves Estate of $200,000

LONDON — (AP) — A "pauper" who died at Capetown left $200,000 in gilt edged stocks, it has been revealed here. He was Alexander McIntosh, 77, a bachelor who lived a lonely "poverty stricken" life in a dismal cellar in the poor quarter of Capetown. He wore tattered clothes and used to hunt in street refuse bins for trifles of value.

He collected cigar and cigarette ends from gutters. It is understood he left $2,000 to a Baptist Church in Fife, Scotland, and the remainder of his wealth to brothers and sisters in Britain. McIntosh, a former Linotype operator and onetime active trade unionist, became miserly after retirement.
