PRIVATE CUT-OVER LADNS IN THE WEST REVERT TO PUBLIC

Private forest lands in many parts of the west which should be a permanent asset to the local communities through continuous timber production are being converted into a permanent liability through loss of the young growth left after logging.

This is pointed out by Chief Forester R. Y. Stuart of the forest service, United States department of agriculture, in a statement made public today.

"Private ownership of extensive areas of western timberland has been undertaken in order to obtain the timber," Major Stuart said. "That gone, much of the land will come back on the public. Originally a part of the public domain, through tax reversion it is forced out on the state or county.

"To restore this land to productive condition is a long and burdensome undertaking, which neither the states nor the counties as a rule want to assume. The public welfare requires that it be assumed, and in many cases national forest administration affords a means for accomplishing it. Under these circumstances the local anxiety that has sometimes been manifested for having the valuable national forest timber lands opened to private acquisition or made over to the states is replaced by a pronounced anxiety to have the national forests made larger."

The situation that is developing is well illustrated by current conditions in northern Idaho, according to Major Stuart. "Idaho law," he says, "requires all forest land owners to maintain adequate fire protection, and if they fail to do so the state provides it and charges the cost to the owners as a tax. Climatic conditions in Idaho make the cost of protection against fire high. As company holdings are progressively cut over the inducement to pay the cost of protection grows less and less, for the interest of most landowners is chiefly, if not wholly, in the merchantable stands. The alternative is tax delinquency and abandonment of title.

"Tax-reverting lands pass to the counties, which usually do not afford fire protection. The result is that large acreages are lacking the protection and management needed to make them permanent assets to the local communities. As a rule these lands are not worth their carrying cost for grazing use alone; and aside from timber growing and grazing they have no use either present or prospective.

"This situation has resulted in a strong local demand in Idaho for a law to extend the boundaries of the St. Joe and Coeur d'Alene national forests. The objects sought are to obtain adequate protection of the widely scattered areas of unreserved public lands that would be included in the forest through establishing new boundaries and to make possible the acquisition by the government of private cut-over lands under the provision of the general exchange law."

The underlying economic factors involved in the Idaho situation, said Major Stuart, will be operative ultimately for and wide throughout the west, as they are already operative in certain parts of the Lake States and in other regions in the East.

TROJANS DATE CARNEGIE TECH FOR DECEMBER, 1929

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 12.—The University of Southern California's football team will meet Carnegie Tech here on December 14, 1929, said a telegram from Gwynn Wilson, Trojan general manager, received by Arnold Eddy, graduate manager late last night. Wilson wired from New York. The game with the Skibos rounds out the Trojan's expansion program for next season. The scheduling of the Carnegie Tech game here was considered necessary by the Trojan management because of three big games away from home next year—Stanford, Washington and Notre Dame.

FARMERS AGAIN OFFERED GOLD BRICK SWINE PLAN

The old Spanish prisoner hoax, the three shell game and the bird edge swine raising scheme are three confidence games that are constantly killed off only to appear elsewhere in all their glory. Only six months ago the animal husbandry department of the state college broadcast a warning that the swine raising promoters were "at large" in two eastern Oregon counties, yet similar gentry are now reported at work in another county in the state.

The plan as presented sounds plausible enough, as the promoters agree to sell a pure bred sow considerably above the market price to a farmer who in turn may sell all the gilts from the first two litters back to the company at $35 each. The catch comes, say local authorities, in that several loop holes are left for the company but none for the farmer.

As soon as the scheme was exposed last spring, the promoters at work then faded away suddenly, one even neglecting to settle a hotel bill. The new ones reappeared in a county where the county agent was being charged, hence the farmers' "watch dog" was temporarily absent.

Harry C. Stearns' History of Roseburg and the State of Oregon

THE eastern states, as has already been recorded, were not particularly anxious to adopt an aggressive foreign policy, since the Atlantic seaboard would naturally stand the brunt of an enemy attack, but the western states were interested in seeing the flag of the union sweep through from sea to sea.

The discussion in Congress at this time revealed the fact that the possibility of a war as the result of a determined and aggressive foreign policy was not considered unlikely.
