TAX MUDDLE UP FOR CLARIFYING BY LEGISLATURE

Recurring Fish Controversy Also Awaiting Disposal; Change Proposed in Election Code.

BY CLAYTON V. BERNHARD
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the opening of the 36th legislative assembly in Oregon at Salem just one month away, lines are already being drawn for organization of the house and senate, and the 89 members of the two bodies are looking toward what they consider one of the most interesting sessions in recent years. A state senator from Marion county to fill the vacancy caused by the death recently of Senator Lloyd T. Reynolds, is yet to be named to complete the roster of 30 in the upper house. The house of representatives comprises 60 members.

The Oregon legislature at this session will comprise a larger group of experienced lawyers than recent previous sessions, a survey revealed. One lone democrat will hold a seat in the senate, while seven democrats have been elected to the house. Since party lines are not drawn in the Oregon legislature, this situation will not affect actions of lawmakers.

The organization of the house has not been definitely determined at the present time, although Frank Lonergan claims enough support to elect him speaker over Herbert Gordon, who is determined to wage a battle for the chair. Both are from Multnomah county and both are veterans in the state legislature. It is expected that the election of either will not be certain until the vote is counted at the initial meeting of the house.

Senator Eddy Aspires

Willard L. Marks of Linn county is generally conceded the presidency of the state senate, and there appears but little doubt that he will be named. He has served two terms in the senate and in the last session was chairman of several important committees. His only possible competitor for the chair is Senator B. L. Eddy, Douglas county. Marks, however, believes he has the senate sewed and has already started work on committee assignments.

Taxation Big Problem

Reports have been received of numerous measures now being prepared for the legislative hopper, ranging in consideration of school levies, fishing regulations, automobile licenses, primary election law changes, to the four main issues which are taxation, water power, control of utilities and road legislation.

Of all these measures, the tax muddle is possibly the most perplexing. All the others present their difficulties, but since the state supreme court's action declaring the intangibles tax unconstitutional, leaving about a million dollars collected by this tax last year to be returned to taxpayers, this subject carries enough of controversial angles to engage law makers for considerable of the 40 day session.

Fish Row Eternal

The Rogue river closing, a subject which has been before the legislature in the past and which was acted upon by the electorate at the last election, will again make its appearance as one of the leading issues. The voters defeated the move to close the river to commercial fishing by a margin of 2834 votes. A measure to close the stream, varying slightly from the form on the November ballot, is being drawn for presentation at the opening of the legislature, it was learned. The interim fish committee has been holding meetings over the state on this subject and this week in Portland heard the demand of the state game commission to close the stream to save some of chinook and steelhead salmon. Commercial fishermen are opposing closing.

The matter of a higher basis of district school tax levy upon which to base annual increases, will be presented as well as changes in automobile operators' licenses as outlined by Secretary of State Hal E. Hoss; changing the time of holding the state primary election, and a method of filling vacancies in the legislature, proposed under the enabling act passed by the voters last month.

MILLIONS NEEDED FOR WAR ON RUST

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

SPOKANE, Wash., Dec. 11.—Seven and a half million "iron men" must be enlisted against the deadly blister rust, now menacing northwest timber industries, if the forests are to be saved from destruction, federal officials said today.

Foresters of all divisions of the federal and state services, estimating that irreparable havoc would be wreaked in white pine timber if the parasite is not checked within ten years, declared $7,727,044 must be spent in the "inland empire" composed of parts of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, to protect 3,994,781 acres of forest.

Figures of the federal blister rust control office and forest service, released today, said $21 an acre for initial attacks in blister rust and 50 cents an acre thereafter, would be needed.
