U. S. POLITICAL OBSERVATIONS

By BYRON PRICE
(Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington.)

Widely-advertised predictions that the congressional session beginning in January will end in April have a hollow sound when the tasks ahead are considered.

The appropriation bills alone will require weeks of work. It is questionable whether any past congress has found budgetary problems quite so controversy-laden as they will be in 1936.

Apparently the tax bill passed last session is to be overhauled in some particulars. Tax legislation always is time-consuming, and it promises to be particularly so if the subject is reopened in the current atmosphere of government-business conflict.

The impression is general that the supreme court will throw out AAA, and that a new farm program will have to be worked out. Other "new deal" laws also are in judicial jeopardy, and the need for a variety of stop-gap legislation is not improbable.

The bonus bill already has been given a place on the calendar. A revamping of the new neutrality act is assured. The Townsend plan again is knocking at the door.

Besides, 1936 is a campaign year. In campaign years congress gets even more than the ordinary pleasure out of hearing itself talk.

Townsend Stresgth

Unless the advance indications are misleading, the bonus and the Townsend old age pension plan are destined to make special trouble for the administration strategists.

The bonus advocates have been reorganizing. The opposition appears to have no hope of stopping passage by both senate and house, and current surveys raise a doubt whether enough votes can be mustered to uphold a presidential veto.

Washington is hearing surprising things about the Townsend movement, whose leaders are playing the clever game of staying out of presidential politics and concentrating on congress.

The west remains the Townsend stronghold—it is reported that in California no member of congress dares to be against the plan, and organizers claim a voting strength of 30,000 in Idaho, enough to turn any election in a state which cast less than 180,000 votes in 1932.

But other sections are being heard from, too. A Townsendite has won a surprise republican election for congress in Michigan. Congressmen from Texas and Massachusetts recently have disclosed that they were receiving petitions by the thousands from their constituents.

Last session the Townsend plan received only 56 house votes. All quarters expect an increase next session, and there is lively speculation whether the increase may not be overwhelming.

Republican Plans

In spite of the fact that they are far outnumbered, senate and house republicans may present a comprehensive legislative program of their own, and insist on debating it at length.

There are strong reasons why some of the minority leaders want to follow such a course—not fully committing the party, perhaps, but at least making an affirmative showing from the republican side.

The constant democratic complaint has been that the opposition merely finds fault, without offering anything constructive. It is argued that the only logical reply for the republicans is to introduce a group of legislative proposals and let the party in power take the responsibility of turning them down.

These are only a few of the things which raise up serious questions about predictions for an early adjournment.

Some of the older heads on Capitol Hill will be content if the session ends in time for the national political conventions, late in June.
