PROMOTERS OF PROGRESS.

People who send their money away to large city stores or who do shopping in other centers, are slow to realize how they are failing to co-operate with the forces for progress on which they depend to put their home communities ahead. The big city store, or the clerk or merchant in some other city, is not interested in Roseburg and is not concerned to do one thing to put this community ahead. But when you support your home stores, you promote agencies that are working every minute to advance the interests of this city. The distant store is interested to make sales, and if it gets rid of its goods it is satisfied. But the home merchant is not merely interested to sell his goods, but he is planning and working all the time to build up the community of which he is a part. If he sells farm tools or implements, he is all the time on the lookout for new ideas that will help the country people to increase production and develop the prosperity of the community. If he sells household stuff, he is on the watch for goods that will help his town people to keep up their places at the minimum of expense. The thought of improvement of the home community and increase of its prosperity runs through all his purposes and affects all his plans and purchases. It is, or is it not, worth while for our people to allay themselves with these local forces that are working every day for the prosperity of this home community? The most limited intelligence should say that it is worth while, and that it is showing a poor spirit of reciprocity to fail to do so. So when you buy of your home stores, you can reflect that you are strengthening enterprises which are working to build up your community, and to make your property and your job more valuable, your civic institutions more prosperous, and to make this city a better place to live in.

ABILITY TO RISE.

Life is full of instances of people who have risen far beyond their early surroundings and circles, yet at the start did not seem very exceptional. Lady Astor, the gifted former American girl who has been visiting her home country, might be taken as a representative of such. As a young woman she was bright and clever, but there are lots of others who would have made an equally fine appearance. Now in the British parliament she has made herself a name all over the civilized world and is one of the leaders of the thought of women. So it is with the majority of men in the big business and political positions. They seem at the outset about like many other people. They would be above the average of course, yet not by any means wonders. But their ability comes from practice in doing things. When they get an opportunity to exercise responsibility they throw their whole hearts into it. As they will the duties of their first positions, their skill, judgment and power of leadership grows. Their advance is due not so much to their great superiority, as to their making the best use of their opportunities, and the wisdom that grows through their experiences. So the path to success is open to any ambitious young person who has a fair amount of judgment. He may be distrustful of his powers at the start. But if he can make good in his first opportunities, perform his tasks so well that he wins attention, so that promotions come to him, his power to do things and to make large decisions and inspire others will grow as time goes on. His capacity for big things will keep enlarging, and the great responsibilities of high position may seem easier to him finally than the small difficulties of his first steps upward appeared at the time.

GOOD EVENING FOLKS—

THE LITTLE GREEN TENTS.

The little green tents where the soldiers sleep, and the sunbeams play and the women weep, are covered with flowers today; and between the tents walk the weary few, who were young and stalwart in 'sixty-two, when they went to the war away. The little green tents are built of sod, and they are not long and they are not broad, but the soldiers have lots of room; and the sod is part of the land they saved, when the flag of the enemy darkly waved, the symbol of dole and doom. The little green tent is a thing divine; the little green tent is a country's shrine, where patriots kneel and pray; and the brave men left, so old, so few, were young and stalwart in 'sixty-two, when they went to the war away!

Everybody is "listening in" on everybody else since the radio has become the vogue in this land of the spree and ether wave. Why, you can sit at home in the easy chair with your radiophone beside you and hear loving couples spooning in the parks. And, gossips will be out of work for the radio beats them to telling tales. Yes, wifie might even "listen in" to ascertain when hubby leaves the office and check up all his movements all the way home. No more freedom of the sprees for hubby. It is all very wonderful for the "listener in" on the radio. But, it is a very embarrassing interference with privacy. Well, those who enjoy radio will get just as much enjoyment from the following squibs clipped from newspapers over the entire nation:

OLDTIMER SPEAKS:

I kin remember when the music in the hair was broadcast from the woodshed.—Cincinnati (O.) Enquirer.

OH! GIRLS!

"Listening in" with the radio is bound to bring ears back into style.—Youngstown (O.) Telegram.

OLD FASHIONED.

"I do not like the radio," said Ezra Arthur Hines; "'Tis much more fun to listen in upon the party lines."—Portland Express.

DETAIL MISSING.

The pleasure of receiving the box score by radio will be doubled if they have someone cuss the umpire between plays.—New Castle Herald.

TIME FOR PEACE.

With the radiophone in receptive mood, all the family quarrels may be enjoyed by the neighbors without putting ears to the walls or opening the windows.—"Topics of the Day" Films.

LIGHTNING LOVE.

Now that they make love by radio there's some fast sparking.—Columbus (O.) Citizen.

OUTA STYLE.

The only objection some people find in the wireless telephone is that it furnishes a reason for staying at home.—South Bend Tribune.

FORMAL FUN.

"Spiffins is the most henpecked man in the world. His wife makes him put on evening clothes to stay at home and listen to a radio concert."—Montreal Herald.

EVER PRESENT.

If these wireless telephones keep on, a man's wife can talk to him no matter where he goes.—Greenville Piedmont.

BILL'S FORESIGHT.

Dads and Lads Have Frolic

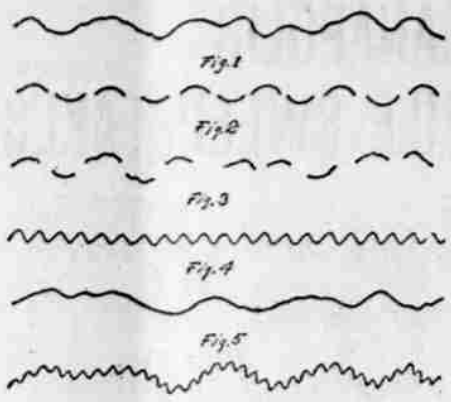
The Dads and Lads club frolic in Laurelwood park yesterday evening was a huge success. There was a fine attendance and the dads mingled freely with the lads and took part with them in the many games and sports which supplied entertainment. In fact the dads seemed to get more "kick" out of the frolic than did the lads as for once they let go and romped about through the park and made the "kids" hustle to keep up. Races, sports and games of all kinds kept everyone interested until a late hour when "hot dogs," buns and ice cream were served. The Dads and Lads club is organized for the purpose of bringing about a closer fellowship between the dads and lads of the community and it is expected that several picnics and frolics will be held during the summer. Dr. Seely, president of the club, made a very interesting talk last night explaining the purposes and aims of the club.

THE HOME RADIO

How to Make and Use It — By A. HYATT VERRILL

III. WIRELESS TELEPHONY

In many ways, all the principles and laws of wireless telegraphy apply equally well to radio telephony, but, in other ways, there are great differences between the two. In the first place, the vibrations or waves sent out by the wireless telegraph transmitter are interrupted as they are produced by the vibrator of a spark coil and while the flow of the oscillations or waves may be so rapid that they appear as a steady stream, yet there is really a distinct pause after each one. If a telephone transmitter and receiver were attached to the ordinary wireless instruments used in telegraphy, the sounds or vibrations of the voice would vary the path of the electrical oscillations and the same variations would be produced on the receiver. But, owing to the fact that the waves are interrupted and are not continuous, the words or sounds would be cut up into sections which would be meaningless, although such sounds as music, bells, whistling, etc., might be recognizable. In fact sounds of this sort frequently have been heard over ordinary wireless telegraph instruments. Hence it is easy to see that the only reason why all sounds cannot be carried through space by ordinary wireless telegraph apparatus is because of the interrupted or broken waves, whereas, if these waves were continuous or were so incredibly rapid as to appear continuous, the sounds they transmitted could easily be heard and understood. Therefore, the real fundamental key to successful wireless telephony lies in producing what are known as continuous waves and it is to the perfection and control of such waves that radio telephony owes much of its rapid advancement.



The accompanying figures, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 illustrate just how the interrupted telegraphy currents and the continuous waves carry sounds. Thus, 1 represents the variations in vibrations in a certain word. 2, the intermittent oscillations of the wireless telegraph sender and 3, the way the word would be broken and interrupted by being transmitted by means of such interrupted waves. Figure 4, on the other hand, shows the continuous waves of the wireless telephone transmitter; 5, the sound waves of a word and 6, the way the continuous waves, interrupted by the words would appear. By studying these diagrams you can easily see the difference between the word broken up as in figure 3 and flowing smoothly as in figure 6. It must be borne in mind, however, that whereas the sounds of the voice, of music, etc., cannot be satisfactorily sent or received by wireless telegraph instruments, yet wireless telegrams can be sent to perfection, and can be perfectly received, over wireless telephone instruments. Indeed, the very best transmitting radiophone sets serve the best for sending telegraphic messages, the only difference being that for the former the continuous high frequency waves are used, whereas, when sending code messages by telegraph, the waves are broken or "chopped" by suitable instruments and a key which opens and closes the circuit.

In using wireless telephony, just as in wireless telegraphy, there must be two separate units known as transmitters and receivers and a transmitter can be used only for sending and a receiver for receiving. As the sending or transmitting apparatus of the wireless telephone is far more complicated than the receiving instruments, as the greatest interest in wireless telephony lies in receiving the messages, songs, etc., sent broadcast from large sending stations, and as the receivers are very simple and easy to understand or to construct, we will put the cart before the horse, so to speak, and consider the receiving end of radio telephony before we take up the sending end.
