Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance

By Idah McGlone Gibson

THE AGREEMENT

"It is no wonder, Dr. George, that music speaks in every language—its accents of love, of hate, of joy, of sorrow, of content, of happiness are universal.

"I sat there on a stool at Harry's feet, my head against his knee and I wondered if the same emotion which filled my soul had been in the heart of the Hawaiian queen when she bade farewell to her lover, in that poignant melody which we know as Aloha Oe.

"It seems to me, Dr. George, as though everything conspired to make me love Harry. You see, I had been a very lonely, very self-contained, very self-sufficient woman all my life.

"Other men had made love to me, but it was with a kind of gambling spirit that I entered the game with them.

"Virtually, I said, 'If you can make me love you, well and good,' but I resisted every step of the way and eventually one or both of us, became tired.

"But with Harry it was different. His love as well as mine seemed an irresistible force that I could not—and did not—want to resist. I had no thought of concealment. I told him I loved him without modesty, without shame. It seemed almost enough to love, because it was a new and splendid experience. And because I was so taken up with this experience I would not look ahead.

"As we sat there listening to that primitive melody, the lights came up on the campus of the university across from my windows and the moon peeped in from over the housetops.

"It was one of those moments which memory will always keep enshrined for anyone who has ever lived it.

"My hand stole into Harry's and—

"Love took up the glass of time
Turned it in his glowing hands
Every moment lightly shaken
Ran itself in golden sands."

"It will always be like this, dear heart," said Harry, "because we know each other so well. I believe fate had planned this from the beginning of time."

"It seems almost too beautiful to be true, too beautiful to last," I whispered. "I do not believe it is possible for mortals to live all the time in the rarefied atmosphere which we are breathing now."

"'Don't be foolish, Margaret,' he said tenderly. 'We are going to have perfect weeks, and months, and years together.'

"And so without saying much the minutes sped. I took him to the midnight train and he left me with the understanding that I would be in his city in two weeks, and then if we were both of the same mind, we would complete the arrangements for our flight.

"When I arrived back in my apartment I again put on the Hawaiian record. Then I seated myself in the blue wing chair and placed my head where Harry's head had lain. Queer thoughts surged through me.

"Some way, dear Dr. George, I understood the haunting invitation of that music and my heart leaped forth at its call.

In the days that intervened I worked as I never had worked before. I finished my stories and planned all my affairs so that I might leave at any time.

"I hardly saw anyone and I must have seemed very much preoccupied to those of my friends who met me at that time.

"I had no word from Harry. I did not expect any.

"I was perfectly happy for one whole week after he left and then one afternoon, while I was sitting at my typewriter finishing a story, all at once I felt a stab of pain, physical pain in my heart.

"I got up and went to the window. It did not seem to me that I could breath. I was almost sure that something dreadful had happened.

"Do you believe, Dr. George, in telepathy?

"I am just as sure that the moment Harry met the woman he called the American Beauty, I knew it hundreds of miles away as well. I realized, too, the influence she was exerting over him.

"No, I don't blame her, Dr. George. Perhaps under the circumstances I should have done the same. Indeed, I think I did the same only in a little different way.

"I like to feel that my fascination for Harry was not wholly physical.

"You being very materialistic will probably laugh at this, but it is absolutely true; there is something more to real love than physical attraction. There is a real soul affinity, even though that expression has been abused."

"She is right," interrupted Clavering, "every man recognizes this. There are some women whose souls beat in unison with yours—you know this Milt—and yet physically they do not attract you in the least. You do not even wish to put your arms about them."

"In other words," said Davis, "the woman in a man's heart is not always the woman in his arms.

Tomorrow—The Meeting.

DODGE BROTHERS BUILD NEW COUPE

Closed Car For Business Men Is Distinct Achievement in Automotive Field.

First With All Steel Body—Other Cars Have New Body Design.

Behind the simple phraseology of an announcement which Dodge Brothers, Detroit automobile manufacturers, are publishing today in every important city and town in America, lies the story of a new achievement in automobile development. "Dodge Brothers announce a business coupe; conservative changes in the body design of all other types," the advertisement reads.

The business coupe is the first all-steel closed car ever marketed. In this respect it takes a new and distinct place in automotive history, for it involves an entirely unique principle of coupe body construction. The steel body not only practically eliminates the problem of limited production, due to the tedious and costly individual workmanship required on wood bodies but also enables the manufacturers to give the coupe the same lustrous baked enamel finish which has already contributed so much to the reputation of Dodge Brothers open cars. This process in itself will also facilitate quantity production, as an enormous amount of time was consumed heretofore in applying the numerous coats of paint required on wood.

Naturally, these are important factors in the determination of the selling price, resulting in economies which Dodge Brothers are passing directly to the purchaser. "Wood is practically eliminated from the construction of this car," said J. O. Newland, the local dealer. "Even the framework and panels are of steel, and the natural result is a lighter, quieter and more durable car. Steel prolongs life and reduces the possibility of squeaks and rattles.

"The business men of America have been expecting such a coupe and Dodge Brothers have given it to them.

"It is in reality a coupe at a roadster price. While it is easily attractive enough for any use, it is particularly designed for the business man—who needs the comfort and protection of a closed car in his work, but who can easily get along without a few of the luxuries which, in the past, have made the closed car so expensive. The business coupe is built inside and out to withstand the wear and tear of every day use—and yet it retains the same lightness and beauty of line which everyone is accustomed to look for in Dodge Brothers closed cars. It lacks only what I might term the depreciation liabilities of the more expensive coupe. It is upholstered in genuine leather, has a wide, comfortable straight seat, is equipped with cord tires, heater, dome light, windshield cleaner and adjustments for raising and lowering windows. The doors are unusually wide and are fitted with new easy closing Yale locks. There is more than the usual amount of leg room and convenient and spacious luggage compartments are provided. Doctors, real estate men and salesmen of all kinds will find it just the car they need. We already have good indications of a tremendous demand.

"The change of design in the other Dodge Brothers cars indicated that while Dodge Brothers have always adhered closely to the practical they are also progressive and abreast of the time. It is Dodge Brothers' policy to make improvements year after year and month after month and this is simply another step forward."

Don't be Fooled.

There has been a lot of bunk spread about the Moline Plow Co. being busted and selling out to close up shop. Don't believe a word of it. That kind of talk is the last resort of a lot of old line dealers and salesmen who are not yet willing to admit the war is over. They cannot knock the quality of Moline goods and get away with it; there are too many men who have used them and know better. Price is the last thing they want to mention, and there is nothing left but repair service for them to hang a selling talk on. The Moline Plow Co. maintains as complete a stock of repairs on the Pacific coast as any implement company in the field, and as for going out of business, is it reasonable to think that a company whose sales and profits have been greater this season than ever before is going to quit? Rats? Those fellows are picking at the quilts right now because they see their fat profits disappearing and can't think of anything else to say. Ask any Moline user if our repair parts service has not been as good as any one could expect.

The truth is that the Moline Co. is the only company that had vision and courage enough to face facts, take their losses the same as the farmer had to do, and strike out on a direct to user selling campaign.

The results speak for themselves. They are selling more goods than ever before and building up a good will among farmers that is worth millions of dollars.

If you need any kind of farm machine buy a Moline and be assured you will be able to get all the repairs you will ever need.

"See us first—we can save you money."

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

BY MRS. ELLSBURY

A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury Care Roseburg News-Review

Hereafter no questions will be answered in this column aside from those pertaining to advice to lovelorn. The questions concerning other subjects that are already on hand will be answered, and their completion will close that part of the column.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I want to break my engagement to a man, and I want your advice as to how to do it. Shall I just tell him, when he comes, or shall I write and tell him, and send him the ring? We have been going together for about six months, and engaged about a month. Since we have become engaged I have become gradually more and more sure that I could never marry him and be happy, not because of anything he does, but just because I do not love him I guess. What would be the kindest thing to tell him, as a reason. MAX.

Ans. I think in this case, as it is really nothing definite that he has done, you would be wise to write him and tell him as kindly as possible. Tell him that you are afraid you were a little hasty, and that since thinking it over seriously you have decided to wait and not marry anybody until you are more sure of your own mind.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am nearly 16 years old, and look quite grown up for my age. I have never gone out with any boys, although my girl friends, my same age, have. There is something coming that I want to go to, and if my mother would let me go there is a certain boy that would take me. Don't you think she should let me go? FATSY RUTH.

Ans. Your mother is much wiser than you about just those things, and by the time you are 20 years old you will know why she did not let you do many things that you think you should do now. If she does not want you to, then there is some pretty good reason why you should not. It may be that she thinks only that you are too young. In that case she is right also, because you really are.
