CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By Jane Phelps

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Doreen is the wife of Walter Page, an artist. The later evinces much interest in his model, Helen Ralstrom. He purchases a runabout, selected by Helen, who accompanies him riding more often than his wife. While Page's mother is paying him and Doreen a visit Walter carries Miss Ralstrom into his home at night. The elder Mrs. Page sends her home in an ambulance. This attitude wins Doreen over to her mother-in-law whom she, heretofore, had considered cold and proud, difficult to get along with.

Claire Sheridan and Doreen chance on Helen and Walter dining at a road house together. Doreen's self-possession disturbs Miss Ralstrom's equilibrium.

Chapter 25.

The absurd devotion Mrs. Page showed Fido, rather the silly fuss she made over him, disgusted me. Then the name! Whoever heard of calling a pomeranian Fido? It was ridiculous! That little mite, not much more than a bark and a tail, given the name naturally associated with other breeds, seemed to increase my dislike for him. I did not fear him—as I usually did any dog—but he annoyed me, almost as much as he did Jeanie. When one is not accustomed to an animal in the house, specially in a small apartment, nerves are reaped - in spite of all desire to be sensible and kind.

Mrs. Page knew I did not like Fido, and resented it. When in my presence she seemed to take delight in calling him pet names, kissing him, "mushing over him" Walter called it. At times I disgusted me so that I had to leave the room for fear I should say something to offend Walter's mother; something I had determined not to do.

But Jennie was hard to handle. Often she repeated the remark, made when Mrs. Page first came:

"I ain't never cooked and waited on no dog, and I ain't goin' to now!" Then for half an hour perhaps I would plead with her to "be good" for my sake, telling her Mrs. Page wouldn't be with us long, to try and be patient. I also had increased her wages on the dog's account. But I think my own dislike of the dog in the house, the knowledge that I tried to be patient, had more to do with her staying than anything I said or did.

"I guess if you can stand it I can!" she said after one of my talks to her, "but I never thought I'd come to waitin' on a dog. And such a dog! If he was a nice big one, what was any good if burglars come, it would be different. But that dog ain't good for nothin.' They could steal everythin' in the house and he wouldn't even bark."

Claire knew of Jeanie's antagonism, knew of mine. She loved dogs and laughted at us.

"Just forget it is in the house," she said.

"Forget it!" I returned. "When it's 'darling, mothers sweet precious,' all the time. If people have to cuddle something, why don't they take some poor little motherless baby and cuddle that?"

"Poor Doreen," Claire mocked. "Be glad she has the dog. He keeps her busy often when if it weren't for him she might make things even more disagreeable for you."

That was so. Often she failed to reprove me, to show her dislike to something I said or did because she was too busy petting Fido to pay any attention.

I told her of Mrs. Eldrige, of her sweet patience, her delight in our visit.

"She must be a very lovable character," Mrs. Page said, surprised me—as she often did—by adding: "I should like to go with you if you call on her again."

"That would be delightful!" I replied. "I am sure she would be flattered, and that Claire would be pleased to take you."

"Miss Gordon is a charming woman. I wish I could say as much for some of your other friends. You should be more careful in selecting your associates. A man or woman are judged by the company they keep."

Oh, why did she always have to spoil everything? I wondered. I had been pleased that she wanted to see Mrs. Eldredge, that she had spoken so nicely of Claire. But she couldn't let it go at that; she had to rap someone and take away all my good feeling.

"Now that Mr. and Mrs. Harter," she went on, "They are to my mind very unsuitable companions for you, and—"

"You remember I told you Grace Harter was Walter's friend long before I knew him. He is very fond of her, and likes George also." I interrupted impolitely. "It would look strange if I refused to be on good terms with my husband's friends."

"Women with sharp tongues often make trouble," she replied, sententiously. She never liked it when I involved Walter in anything for which she blamed me.

Tomorrow—Mrs. Page suggests a visit to the studio.

TAX COMMISSION COMPLETES REPORT

SALEM, Jan. 14.—Taxation of intangible property as a measure of relief for the tax burdened tangible property of the state, is recommended by the state tax commission in its annual report just completed today. The recommendation of the commission refers particularly to an income tax. The report is signed by Governor Olcott, Secretary of State Kozer, State Treasurer Hoff and State Tax Commissioner Lovell as members of the tax commission.

"Much wealth escapes paying its just share of the tax burden because it is not reported and can not be found," the report of the commission points out. "One way to make such property pay its part is by means of an income tax. No one can question the justice of such a tax. The only question is as to the wisdom of Oregon imposing such a tax before adjacent states also have done so. We should not impose a tax that will prevent capital investing in this state as we need capital to develop our resources and build up our industries. If we do maintain such a tax it should be, at this time, at a low rate."

Referring to the unpopularity of taxation the report points out that "many experiments and attempts to improve methods are being tried and many changes for the better will come. Such states as Wisconsin, Massachusetts, New York, West Virginia and others are working toward systems which will equalize taxes and collect them from all sources."

"Some of the states are assessing intangible property at a much lower rate than other property and in every case where this has been done it has greatly increased the tax collected. Property which can be easily concealed and is paying only five or six per cent can not and will not stand a tax of two and one-half or three per cent.

THEIVES BREAK INTO REEDSPORT STORES

REEDSPORT, Jan. 13.—Last Thursday some unknown persons entered the Reedsport Meat Market and The Merchants Cafe and finding it easy were went on with their work the second night when they entered The Rainbow Cafe, The Rainbow Billiard Parlor and The Rackleff Grocery, also F. W. Vallermann's General Merchandise store.

It is evident that who ever it was, they sure were going to put in a good supply of all they needed, and also get a little cash so when their provisions run out, they could purchase some and still not have to work.

Thursday night they entered the Reedsport Meat Market, taking about $25 worth of pork, beef, sausage and a few other little things, but left the cash alone. Also the same night they entered the Merchants Cafe, taking several pies, coffee, bread and many other items which did not amount to a great deal, at this place, the cash register was not touched.

CLARA SKAIM FREED OF MURDER CHARGE

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 13.—Clara Elizabeth Skaim was acquitted of the murder of Ferdinand Hochbrunn by a superior court jury here late this afternoon.

Miss Skaim, while waiting for the verdict of the jury after she had been summoned to the courtroom to hear it, sat on the edge of her chair, the muscles of her neck visibly drawn. At the words "not guilty" read by the clerk of the court, she recovered her poise, jumped to her feet as her face broke into a smile and seized her attorney by the hands. She then shook hands with the jurors and with a crowd of friends and strangers that flowed about her.

The jury was out this afternoon from 2 to 4:26 p. m. Two ballots were taken. The first was nine to three for acquittal, the second was 11 to 1, and the third unanimous. The four women on the jury were for acquittal throughout.

WHALES VISIT COOS BAY

MARSHFIELD, Or., Jan. 11.—Two whales entertained the passengers and launch captains on the Marshfield waterfront yesterday morning, spouting and playing about in the bay. The visitors disported next at the mouth of Coos river, afterward at Midway, between Marshfield and North Bend, later at North Bend and before the sawmills, and went on to sea about 10:30 o'clock.

They are said to have been the only whales that ever came into the harbor as far as Marshfield. It is surposed they followed in a school of fish.

LOSS OF POWER ENGLAND FEARS

Sees Her Supremacy of the Seven Seas Fading Into Oblivion

TREATY FAILURE CAUSE

British Empire Ruffled Because Washington Treaty Was Not Ratified—Is Near Danger Point

By LYLE C. WILSON
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(By United Press)

LONDON, Jan. 15.—For the first time in centuries England is minus the trump cards in the game of retaining supremacy of the sea.

Two new capital ships, planned as the most powerful afloat scheduled to be begun this month may remain mere paper sketches in the Admiralty office.

Unless the signatory nations make haste to consummate the Washington disarmament treaty, England will find herself tied with Japan as a bad second in sea power, naval experts point out.

Despite national poverty it was under stood, weeks ago, that plans of the two new ships would be carried to completion. This followed the call for bids on the part of the Admiralty for the construction of the peerless monsters.

It is now rumored that the admiralty's opening of bids was in direct disagreement with the instructions of the Lloyd-George government. The government had ordered that the program be deferred for an indefinite period. On its own initiative the Admiralty called for bids. It is up to the new government, now, to countermand the order or to sanction laying the keels.

The Lloyd-George government proceeded with the scrapping of all the ships specified in the Washington agreement. By so doing, it is pointed out, the existing reserve of the British navy against a possible repudiation of the naval agreement by other signatory powers has been destroyed.

"This "act of good faith" has pushed England perilously near the danger point, the Morning Post declares. Should a repudiation of the Washington agreement occur at this time, the resultant strength of the three great naval powers would be, United States 41 capital ships; Japan 23 capital ships; England 22 capital ships.

The United States has not, according to the Post, taken steps to scrap designated vessels pending the final endorsement of the naval agreement by the government concerned.

Lord Lee of Fareham is quoted as saying that the only reason the Admiralty agreed to the scrapping of nineteen capital ships by the late government was that the other powers should fulfill their obligations and that two new ships allowed under the agreement should be made immediately available.

Either of these promises to the Admiralty's conclusion to sanction the scrapping program may prove unsound. But, even though the treaty is poorly carried out, England will be far behind unless some means of carrying out the construction of the two new ships is found.

After Ratification.

After ratification all around, the United States would possess 20 capital ships built and building. Five of these would be post Jutland. Japan would have 10 capital ships, two of them post-Jutland. England would have an imposing total of 22 capital ships. But, the Post points out, only one of these, the Hood, would embody the improvements derived from the experience of the war. The foregoing status puts England in a distinctly inferior position to the United States in ultra-modern ships.

If the treaty is ratified all around, and if the money for the construction of the two new ships is forthcoming, England and the United States will be on a parity with 20 capital ships each. Under the agreement England must scrap four capital vessels upon commissioning the pair of new ones. Japan's quota will be ten ships. If there is a hitch anywhere the balance is destroyed and England for the first time will find herself second in naval power.

Meantime alarming rumors come from France that the naval agreement may not be okayed.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT WORK

Gained Strength, Weight and Now Doing Own Work, by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Marion, Ind.—"I was all run-down, nervous and bent over. I could hardly drag around, let alone do my work. I read some letters in the papers telling what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and I thought I would try it. Then a man told my husband about his wife and what good it had done her and wanted him to have me try it. I took one bottle and could see what it did for me in a week's time, and when I had taken three bottles I had gained both in strength and weight and was doing my own work. I took it before my last baby was born and it helped me so much. I sure am glad to recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who suffers from female ailments, for I know by experience what it can do. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, also the Liver Pills, too, and think them fine."—Mrs. Wm. Eldridge, 620 E. Grant Street, Marion, Indiana.

A record of nearly fifty years service should convince you of the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.
