D BRIMSTONE," FAMOUS ITTSBURGH CHURCH, NOTED FOR SERMONS WITH PUNCH

WALTER C. MERRITT,
ational News Service Staff Correspondent.)

URGH, Pa., April 10.—"Old" pioneer Methodist Episcopal in this city, stands at the Seventh avenue and Smithfield. It is the oldest religious Pittsburgh, dating back years, some say 125 years.

ed about Pittsburgh are some ifices of this denomination: a frock coat is more or less if you want to feel comfort- believe those about you are tally harpooning you if your re not right up to the minute he best.

r a century or more "Old Brimstone," squat little story and a half building, has stood like Gibraltar, unmoved by evolution or anything else. Those in charge have always maintained that folks who come to church come to hear the Gospel and nothing else. Here they get it every Sunday. Here one man or woman is as good as another. The millionaire and the pauper meet on common ground. They come for the same reason. All are equal. There is no class distinction here.

Has Penn Land Grant.

"Old Brimstone" is the possessor of one of the few so-called William Penn church land grants in this city. The plot of ground it occupies is its property so long as it is used for religious purposes. If the congregation should decide to move elsewhere the land, now worth its weight in gold, would immediately revert to the heirs of William Penn, if there be any, or to the State otherwise.

The church stands on a busy corner surrounded by great skyscrapers. The pastor, Rev. Daniel Marsh, is one of the greatest of its long line of ministers. He isn't exactly an old-time "hellfire and brimstone" preacher, but he comes nearer to it than anybody else around here. In more modern language, he might be described as the parson whose sermons have a decided "punch" to them. Rev. Marsh is immensely popular and a live wire in civic works. He keeps an eye on police activities and social irregularities and has accomplished a world of good since he came here some years ago.

COLOR NOTES AND BOLD ONES DISPLAYED IN NEW SPRING STYLES

ETHEL MARSHALL,

Throughout the ter months it would seem, women who purvey raiment shionable have been dreaming of exquisite beauty. t in London's spring fashion almost invariably centers in frocks that are displayed by ates. The displays this year ps more elaborate and cer- ly as beautiful as those of since the subdued days of the softly shaded confines dors lovely mannequins, sild- rveous beoares and shining have paraded in gorgeous fore swarms of the elite. Scenes as elaborately beautiful as those of old-time court functions have been created for the entertainment of patrons of the various salons.

At one display, where Princess Marie Louise was among the crowd of fashionably gowned spectators, royalty and others were particularly intrigued by a splendid costume train of ostrich feathers en diamente. As the stately mannequin glided down the room the diamente feathers glittered like a flood of cold moonlight on an ice-sheathed lake. The train was appended to a bizarre frock, with a front resembling a rose hankerchief and a panel of black velvet comprising the back.

Green apparently is a predominant note in the displays of evening dress. One modiste displayed a frock in soft sea-green, covered with little Egyptian men made of silver tissue. Another creation in sea-green was embellished by a huge cross, which hung on a chain suspended to the waistline. The mannequin displaying this robe added to its strikingness by wearing magnificent diamond eardrops.

A silver frock with a train of resplendent blue sequins attracted much comment from visitors at one of the leading displays, while another creation that caused sharp intakes of feminine breath was worn by a tall mannequin who showed off to advantage the gown of ivory crepe romaine, covered with circles of pearls. A pink feather fan and a pink chiffon appendage falling lightly from the front of one shoulder gave a soft touch of color to the creation.

A court gown of pale mauve, with a soft blue train, made its mannequin wearer at one of the "openings" look like a delicate orchid, while a more vigorous note of Spring was inserted by the mannequin who, looking like a human daffodil, paraded before the rasping admirers in a gown of soft yellow brocade.

For patrons of the brunette type a leading modiste displayed a gown of Chinese blue, embroidered with silver plates, with a train of Chinese blue velvet bedecked with many colored beads. Another striking creation displayed was a black and white frock, the white part entirely covered with sequins, while the train was of black chiffon velvet veiled with old Spanish lace.

Beads and embroidery apparently are very popular with the elite, while the headgear on display with the court gowns ran strongly to a show of many-colored brilliants, imparting an almost Oriental tone to the ensemble effect.

COMPERS SAYS ACTION HASTY

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The supreme court's decision invalidating the District of Columbias minimum wage law was declared today by President Compers of the American federation of labor to have "barely" set forth the reactionary employer viewpoint of the wage earner. "Five justices, a bare majority of one, have taken from the women and girl wage earners the protection that guaranteed them something approaching a fair wage and fair hours of work," said Compers.

NAVY'S POSTERS ALL BUNK, SAYS SENATOR'S WIFE

By GEORGE E. DURNO,
(International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Those beautiful, highly-colored lithographs which may be found parked artistically on almost any busy street corner, inviting the youth of America to "Join the Army and Learn a Trade" or "Join the Navy and See the World" are the "bunk" pure and simple—no less an authority than Mrs. Robert M. LaFollette, wife of the Progressive Senator from Wisconsin, says so.

As the cartoonist says: "Yes, but it don't mean anything."

Mrs. Lafollette, who is an ardent worker for universal and everlasting peace and who has just completed a vigorous participation in the annual convention of the International League for Peace and Freedom, had much to say regarding the Army-Navy-Marine recruiting posters. They are actual misrepresentations she believes, and as such should be regarded.

She gazed meditatively at a particularly ornate poser showing some of Uncle Sam's sailor boys disporting themselves in a tropical surf—a picture so enticing and realistic one could almost hear ukeleles and the rustle of grass skirts.

"That's only half the picture," she said. "I wonder if the navy would display pictures of a bunch of 'gobs' their pants rolled up to their knees, mopping the deck? Not likely!"

Mrs. Lafollettee agrees the young men of the country can "learn a trade" by joining the army. Sure—kitchen police, digging ditches, or blacking a "loole's" boots.

Some very decided remarks were forthcoming anent a certain advertisement by the War Department for artists to draw posters for the summer training camps. This add suggested that the artist concentrate upon the vacation qualities and recreation of entering these camps.

"No mention of military training, and yet these are to be military camps," she said. "Deliberately false advertising—that's what it is, and our boys should be encouraged to ignore it."

RADICAL RAID NETS 16

WASHINGTON, April 9.—Two raids were made here tonight by police and department of justice agents in a roundup of alleged radicals. Sixteen persons were taken to police headquarters for questioning.

The officers first went to the Typograhpical Temple where a meeting in behalf of William Z. Foster, labor leader was to have been held tonight under the auspices of the labor defense council. The rally, police were informed, was called off when officers of the Typographical union learned of its nature, but ten persons appeared, apparently unaware that it had been cancelled. Four were permitted to leave while the others were detained by the police. A few minutes later the raiding detail entered a store room in the business section of the city, which, it is alleged, is headquarters here for a group of radicals. Ten persons found in the room were taken to the police station.
