AT THE THEATERS

Revue Heads Arcade Sunday Vaudeville Bill

Music, dancing, comedy and novelties compose one of the most pronounced shows of the season which will be seen at the Arcade theater on Sunday. The bill is headed by Griffin & La Mont Revue, six talented artists in a musical, singing and dancing offering. This number affords them every opportunity to sing, dance, mimic and impersonate. Tint in "A Novelty Surprise" has an inimitable style and novel presentation. Dulferry & DulPreeze in "Watch Little George" present a comedy skit and burlesque on magic. Lorraine & Hazelle in "Hits and Bits" is a sister team in singing and dancing numbers. Aerial Lazelle "The Whirlwind Trapeze Artist" comes to vaudeville after several successful seasons in the circus tents.

Sills Knocks Out Beery in Screen Battle

It is commonly accepted in screen circles that the greatest fistic battle seen on the screen was staged by Milton Sills and Noah Beery in "The Spoilers" some years ago. Ever since it was released film men have talked of that fight whenever screen battles are mentioned. Up until now it has stood as the screen's classic hand-to-hand battle.

But Sunday and Monday at the Star theater motion picture goers will see this same pair, Sills and Beery, in a battle which critics declare is even greater than that of "The Spoilers." It is a screen battle that will go down through the years.

This fight takes place in "Paradise," First National's latest Milton Sills starring vehicle, which stays Sunday and Monday at the Star theater with one of the most brilliant casts that picture lovers have ever seen. Included in the cast in addition to Sills and Beery are Betty Bronson, Kate Price, Charlie Murray, Lloyd Whitlock, Claude King and Ashley Cooper.

A comedy based on one of O'Henry's stories will also be shown.

"The Bat" Is Coming to The Arcade

Here's a challenge:

See "The Bat," which comes to the Arcade theater Monday for a three-day run, and if you can fathom the identity of the title character before the exposure in the final scenes, you are one in a million.

For "The Bat," both as a stage play and as the generation's outstanding mystery melodrama, has baffled millions of people throughout the world. The cinema version of the Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood stage success was produced by Roland West, genius of screen thrillers such as "The Unknown Purple" and "The Monster."

Some of the notables in the all-star cast are Jewel Carmen, Jack Pickford, Louise Fazenda, Emily Fitzroy, Robert McKim, Tullio Carminati, Eddie Gribbon, Andre de Beranger, Lee Shumway, Charles Herzinger, Arthur Housman and Sojin, noted Oriental actor.

There is only one condition to this challenge and that is, after you have seen the picture and know how it ends, you don't tell your friends but let them find out for themselves.

Screen Work of Two Chaplins Recalled

Vaudeville audiences who remember back to the Karno sketch "A Night in an English Music Hall," remember it as probably the funniest thing of its sort ever put on the stage. And most of the fun was due to the work of the rib-tickling comedian who played the drunken spectator who sat in the box. There was also another comedian in the cast who played the boy with the putty blower.

The putty blowing comedian left the sketch to go into motion pictures, where he made himself famous. He was Charlie Chaplin.

The other comedian was his brother, and, since Charlie was earning so much money, brother joined forces with him as business manager. It seemed a pity to some managers that the brother, who started out as recognizably the funnier of the two, should have given up his acting, and eventually a way was found to remedy the situation. "Charley's Aunt" was being put into motion pictures, and Syd Chaplin was persuaded to return to the grease-paint.

In one bound he landed into popularity that has equalled that of his brother Charlie. After "Charley's Aunt," Charlie's brother did "The Man on the Box", and now he seems to have made the greatest hit of all in "Oh! What a Nurse!", the Warner picture that opens at Sherry theatre on Sunday for a run of 3 days.

Comedy showing "Nothing Matters".

Doris Costello In Film Triumph At Sherrys

"Bride of the Storm," the J. Stuart Blackton production for Warner Bros. opened yesterday at the Sherry theatre, and scored an emphatic triumph.

The story concerns a lovely orphaned girl (Dolores Costello,) who has been brought up by three Dutchmen, owners of a lighthouse near where she and her mother had been shipwrecked. In order to win her huge fortune, the scheming old grandfather (Tyrone Power) plans to marry her to his idiot grandson Hans(Otto Matticson). His own son Piet (Sheldon Lewis), decides he wants to marry the girl himself, and Faith's life is made up of horrible quarrels.

Finally, when they have sent for a justice to marry Faith to Hans to definitely settle matters, Faith meets a handsome young American Naval officer, Dick Wayne (John Harron), who has come to meet a broken shipmate. Dick falls in love with Faith and after a series of thrilling fights and daring rescues, the three cruel Dutchmen are killed and the girl taken to her native Maryland and to happiness.

"Bride of the Storm" is the screen version of "Maryland, My Maryland," written by James Francis Dwyer and adapted by Marian Constance.

Dolores Costello is the star. Her beauty, personality, charm and sheer dramatic power make her one of the most important stars of the screen.
