Federal Payroll, Boosted to Record in Wartime, Doesn't Hit Fast Pace of Reduction

By JACK STINNETT

WASHINGTON.—There's a good deal of complaint around here—especially in Congress—that the federal payroll isn't going down from its wartime high as fast as it should.

Bare figures indicate that federal employes may level off soon, at least temporarily, at about 2,400,000—only 600,000 under the all-time war high. The administration promised that it would have the figure down to 2,000,000 by July 1.

Also, according to the best indexes, the national capital still is growing with no indication of that anticipated postwar exodus.

However, as Jerry Klutz, the Washington Post watchdog on matters of federal employment, points out, figures don't tell the whole story and the government is doing itself an injustice in not breaking down the figures and explaining.

This undoubtedly is true and it provides anti-administration members of the economy bloc plenty of ammunition that actually doesn't amount to much of a bang when an analysis is made.

Estimate Not Accurate

In the first place, the administration undoubtedly erred in its estimate of what it could do about quick postwar whittling on the federal payroll. A lot of war-time agencies have been closed down or are now in the process of closing.

But a number (some very sizable) have sprung up and certain wartime duties of others merely transferred to established departments.

The best example of postwar growth is naturally the Veterans Administration. Virtually dying before the war, VA now finds itself with around 15,000,000 veterans to deal with and with administrative duties undreamed of under the old veterans laws.

Problems Still Tough

National Housing, Surplus Property Disposal and a half dozen others have suddenly to work out reconversion. The Department of Agriculture is finding that it has temporary problems almost as great as those in war. State is reestablishing its embassies, legations and consulates, as well as providing civilians for the occupation forces. Treasury reductions are bound to be slight. Labor has expanded greatly through absorption of war emergency agencies.

While the Army and Navy are getting rid of uniformed personnel at quite a clip now, they are having to replace many of them with civilian employes.

Let's hope that big government on a wartime scale is not here to stay. The figures so far aren't proof that it is.

Truman Doesn't Admit Failure In Paris Conference

WASHINGTON, May 9—(AP)—President Truman told his news conference today that he did not yet consider the Foreign Ministers Conference in Paris a failure.

When the time comes that it has broken down, he said, Secretary of State Byrnes will be authorized to make an announcement.

Some diplomatic authorities here, however, took the view that the conference had failed and that this meant a split of Europe into Soviet and western spheres.

Mr. Truman also told reporters he had not heard about any drastic change in American policy toward Russia because of the disagreements on major European peace issues which the Paris meeting has produced.

And, he remarked sharply, the president makes the foreign policies.

Mr. Truman was asked, too, whether he knew of the existence of a German army in the British zone of occupation in Germany. He said he did not think there is one.

The question had referred to articles by Walter Lippmann, New York Herald Tribune columnist, on conditions in Germany as a result of a personal study of conditions there.

Mr. Truman said he had read the articles and by way of comment remarked that hindsight is a great thing.

A reporter wanted to know whether in this case "hindsight is accurate." Mr. Truman said he couldn't answer that, that he hadn't been to Germany himself.

Diplomatic authorities here, taking a pessimistic view of the foreign ministers' meeting, look for impending developments to complete the cleavage between the areas of Russian dominance and those under the influence of the western powers, headed by the United States and Britain.
