BIRTHDAY REMINDER.

At the end of the year all successful business enterprises take an inventory of their assets and liabilities and a report is made to the stockholders. The future plans of the corporation are made after a careful consideration of the profits and losses of the year. Operations that have not been profitable are discontinued and methods that have proven successful are adopted, is the statement being broadcasted by the public health service. The greatest business is life and living, and its greatest asset is health. A complete physical examination is in the nature of an inventory, by means of which the unpreventable and preventable disabilities are eliminated. The birthday closes the year and a complete physical examination makes it possible to plan in an intelligent way how to avoid unpreventable liabilities. The physician is interested in conserving health and preventing sickness. He is the expert accountant that looks over your record for the past year and determines whether you have been operating at a loss or not. Successful living like successful business, is not due to luck but demands intelligent consideration. The birthday should remind you that it is time for a health inventory before proceeding on another year of uncertainty. A careful study of human book keeping reveals the fact that many men are operating every year at a tremendous loss and it is only a question of time when they will become health bankrupts. As a plain business proposition you need a yearly physical examination. Let you birthday be your health inventory day.

Out of 500 Des Moines, Iowa, high school senior girls who answered a questionaire the other day, as to their future careers, only one said she wanted to marry and have her own home. The others all wanted to be teachers ,writers, nurses, dietitians, lawyers,, doctors, etc. Does this mean that home making instinct is dying out? Perhaps those girls did not tell all they thought. Probably a lot of them entertain at heart the desire for a career of housewifery and motherhood which seems a natural goal. Yet many girls dislike to admit this desire. They feel that it puts them in the light of one who is looking for a husband. In these days of feminism, they are asserting their independence, and saying to the world that they can get along quite well, even if no desirable husband happens to turn up. Perhaps it will be just as well for the world if the girls do take that point of view. The men have been thinking that women were too easily won. There have been too many girls who would take anything that wore trousers that happened to come along. They threw themselves at the man and fascinated them by languishing looks, free manners, and the various seductions of sex. This led many men to adopt a lordly and indifferent attitude, to feel that they can pick and choose to suit themselves. It would be well if the men found that any girl who is worth having is going to be particular. She asks that the men shall conform to certain minimum standards of morality, ability to earn a reasonable living, and gentlemanly conduct. It is then a good thing for women to plan for business and professional careers, so that they need not marry until they get good and ready and the right man presents himself.

A town that boasts a reputation for having high grade school gains in two ways. It attracts a class of people who are determined to have especially good advantages for their children. Those who go to an Idaho winter resort are determined primarily by this factor. They will not put up with a town where the schools are inferior, and they will go to much expense and trouble to locate in a place where a special effort is made for good schools. There is a tremendous cumulative effect from good schools on the population stock. A large part of the graduates of schools in such a place will become attached to a town that values education as bonds and will settle down in near locations. The produce a people—enrolled of more healthy. It develops a population trained to modern methods of civic effort. These people that have had the advantages of good schools have developed a higher range of ambitions and capacities and are able to plan their municipal affairs more wisely. Good schools pay.

PRUNE PICKIN'S

BY BERT G BATES

GOOD EVENING FOLKS—
The other day we
Saw a sign in a
Bisbey restaurant
And it said
"Ladies served here"
And while we were waiting
To place our order
We heard a saw puncher
At the next table
Order a plump snappy blonde
They throw him out.
And we've been wondering why.

WHY OF COURSE!

Certainly, Gladys, it is all right to go walking with your man at night—if you keep on walking.

"What has become of the old-fashioned girl who had to be coaxed to play the piano?" And if we may be pardoned for offering a plausible answer to the riddle, it might be said that a year ago she was tearing the strings off of a ukelele, but this year she is hopping miles in marathon dancing contests.

"Eight o'clock," as the girl said when she swallowed her wrist watch.

1923 CAMP.

Yes! Only 2 more weeks and we'll all be trucking for Diamond Lake. Better get everything lined up as we will be ready three weeks from today. At this writing only 40 boys have signed up for camp and the grub and transportation is being arranged for them. We might be able to squeeze the poor, to if you let us know AT ONCE. All right let's go.

TREASURE HID.

It is reported that a TREASURE has been hid on the Dale Mound a short distance from the Scout Cabin. A prize is offered for the one finding it. It is buried deep after it at least two of the patrol must be together when it is discovered. Several rooms hid this treasure. What they done at the camp on July 1 and 4. When found the treasure will be brought to Scoutmaster Linott by the parties finding it that he might check it up with those carrying it and also arrange for making the award. EVERYBODY OUT AND LET'S GO!
