Orderly Germany Required to End Chaos in Europe

By DeWITT MacKENZIE
AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

Secretary of State Marshall—now en route to Moscow—has expressed doubt that the foreign ministers of France, Britain, Russia and America can write a German treaty at their forthcoming conference in the Soviet capital, because the Big Four still are in disagreement on fundamentals.

That's a disquieting (though not surprising) preview, because the rehabilitation of chaotic Europe hangs on the early conclusion of a constructive German treaty. We can go further and say that peace itself is largely dependent on how quickly and how well the Big Four deal with the now broken nation which but a brief time ago was the dominant power of continental Europe—economically and militarily.

Of course we should recognize that, as General Marshall says, the negotiations will be "extremely difficult," while the world is tensely anxious for the conclusion of a German pact, it doesn't wish to see a treaty which is the product of impetuosity. We want one which will put Germany on her feet economically while rendering her impotent to wage war—which will establish a democratic government that will preclude the rise of Nazism and Prussianism again.

Showdown Stated

However, there is a point at which tactics of delay become deliberate obstruction. Anxiety over the Moscow conference revolves about this truth. Therefore we are justified in believing that the conference will produce a tabling of the cards to see who wants what—to see if there is anyone who doesn't want a quick settlement of Europe's crisis and a return of peace and plenty.

Undue obstruction by any power or powers at that conference would demonstrate a desire for continued disorganization. It would be a tacit admission that the obstructionists expected to profit in some way from the chaos.

Knotty differences of opinion naturally must be expected and there will have to be compromises, but it won't be difficult to differentiate between honest objections and deliberate obstruction. So we may at least expect the Moscow conference to disclose how the land lies.

It will tell whether there is a real desire for a constructive peace shorn of any selfish interests.

Sen. Morse to Press for Action on Access Roads

WASHINGTON, March 6.—(AP)—Senator Morse of Oregon said yesterday he will introduce legislation to direct the national housing expditor to spend $25,000,000 a year for roads into government-owned timber areas.

Morse acted after an exchange of letters with Frank R. Creedon, housing expediitor to spend $25,- don said he believed that an additional expenditure now would not result "in an appreciable increase" in timber supplies for housing. Morse said Creedon added that he believed further construction of access roads should be undertaken by the forest service, the office of Indian Affairs and the Public Roads administration. Morse disagreed and said additional access roads will increase lumber supplies.

He added in a letter to Creedon:

"I think your diecision in this matter is entirely unacceptable to those of us on the Hill who want to do everything we can to further the housing program."

Tokyo Bluebeard Dragged Into Court

TOKYO, March 6. — (AP) — A weird scarecrow of a man in a long black coat nd a pointed straw hat that drooped to his shoulders was tugged into court at the end of a rope here yesterday for trial as Japan's latest Bluebeard, a confessed rapist and strangler of women.

The prisoner peered through two slits in his hut-like hat behind which Japanese law permits him to hide his shame from the public.

In the courtroom, however, removal of the hat wiped out the Wizard of Oz look to disclose mild-appearing, 43-year-old Yoshio Kodaira, former naval warrant officer who told the three judges in the packed and remarkably dirty courtroom that he had killed seven of the 10 women with whose deaths he is charged since April, 1945. Most, he said, were strangled after he had lured them into wooded areas.

Kodaira denied slaying the other three and angrily declared he was not the "peeping Tom" who had annoyed women in a Japanese dormitory by squinting through the windows.

"I never committed such loose conduct—the idea," he said.

The National School Lunch Act provides that not less than 75 percent of the Federal food money appropriated each year shall be disbursed to the States as cash for purchase of food for lunches.

Tests Slated For Vets Lacking High School Diplomas

Oregon veterans of World War II lacking high school diplomas should take advantage of tests approved by the American Council on Education which, if completed successfully, will entitle them to diplomas or to certificates of equivalency, George E. Sandy, director of Veterans' Affairs, advises.

These tests, which may be obtained either through the veteran's high school in his home town in many cases, or through the Veterans Administration guidance centers, are considered accurate measurements of a man's academic abilities and understanding, even though he may never have gone to high school, and as such may be the shortcut to admission to college or to certain job qualifications.

To take the tests, the veteran should first contact his local high school to determine if they are available there, if there is a charge, and if his school will grant a diploma upon completion of the tests. These matters are decided by the individual schools. If his school does not recognize the tests, the veteran may still obtain a certificate of equivalency from the state superintendent of public instruction at Salem.

The veteran must first obtain his certificate of eligibility from the Veterans Administration, and he should contact the guidance center to make an appointment.

Results of the veteran's tests will be forwarded to the high school he last attended, and the principal there will determine if the veteran is eligible for a diploma.

Woman Aide Named

The Oregon Department of Veterans' Affairs has appointed Miss Frances Irene Kerr, Portland, former member of the Waves, as service officer, Director Sandy announced. She will devote her time chiefly to counseling and assisting nearly 4,000 women veterans of Oregon.

Until her appointment, Miss Kerr was a case worker in Multnomah County for the State Welfare Commission, where her employment began in 1942. This period was broken by her service in the Waves from September, 1944 until February, 1946.

Miss Kerr was graduated from the University of Oregon in 1942, with a major in sociology. Women veterans with readjustment problems are urged to contact Miss Kerr at the headquarters of the Department of Veterans' Affairs, State Library Building, Salem.

S. F. Ladies Organize to Keep Cable Cars on Job

SAN FRANCISCO, March 6. — (AP)— Take it from the ladies of the CCSCC—"there'll always be cable cars in San Francisco."

Delegates of 27 women's clubs organized the Citizens' Committee to Save the Cable Cars to fight municipal economy advocates who have recommended scrapping the hill-climbing dinky cars.

"They are costing money," said Mrs. Hans Klussman, president of the arts federation, "but they are worth their weight in gold as an advertising medium."
