It was instituted by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and was known as No. 39 of that jurisdiction. General Washington was elected an honorary member shortly after his return from the Revolutionary War, and his fondness for the old institution is evidenced by a letter written to the lodge and still in its possession. After the surrender of the Pennsylvania warrant, application for a new charter was made to the Grand Lodge of Virginia and General Washington became first and charter Master of Alexandria Lodge No. 22. He subsequently was elected to succeed himself and served in all about 20 months.

WOMAN SO BLUE SHE CRIED

Because of Ill Health—Tells How She Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Burlington, Iowa.—"I used to dread the time for my monthly period as it came every two weeks and lasted for two weeks, and during that time I would have the blues and cry. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am so happy I can hardly express myself. I have gained several pounds and look fine. I have recommended your medicine to my friends and you may publish my letter as a testimonial. I hope your medicine will give others the relief it did me."—Mrs. RALPH GAIL, 2021 Des Moines St., Burlington, Ia.

'A WIFE'S STORY'

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER IV

I often wondered why Paul loved me—he so brilliant, I just a simple small town girl. I still wonder why he married me. He grew impatient as the time for our wedding drew near, often said he wished we had set the time nearer. He couldn't work satisfactorily at the inn and would go away for days at a time. When I asked where he was going he would say "the city" or put me off with some excuse about getting atmosphere for his story.

"I feel cramped here. Out of my element," he explained. Then he would caress me, tell me things would be different when we were married and back in the world he loved, with people of his own kind.

I couldn't blame him. My people were distinctly cool although they no longer opposed him. I had told father and mother, when we first asked their consent to our marriage that if they refused it I would run away. I would have, too. Why I was afraid he would meet some more attractive girl every time he left me. I was miserable until he came back again. He laughed at my jealousy, saying he had had hundreds to pick from before he ever met me.

Again he would say:

"Love goes where it is sent. You are just the nice, appreciative sort a writer needs."

I was appreciative. I flattered his self-love. Perhaps it was that which attracted him to me. I believed in him, in everything he told me—a blind unquestioning belief. Tom said he was my god, and Tom was more nearly right than he knew.

I have found since that there are men like that, me who will fall for a simple sort of a girl because she flatters their egotism, their self-love; because she does not question the right and wrong of what they do. But at this time no such thoughts entered my head.

I was to be married at home, with just the family and a few friends as witnesses. I would have liked a church wedding with all the frills, more to show Paul off than any other reason, but father could not afford it. As it was he had strained his meager resources to give me a trousseau.

Paul was delighted that there was to be no fuss. He knew scarcely anyone outside of my family, hadn't seemed to care to get acquainted. So we were married very quietly, then left at once for New York, "where people really lived," Paul declared.

I had never been far from home, and like all girls was wild to travel. New York was a wonder city of Sunday supplements to me, the place of gilded palaces and never-ceasing interest. On the way Paul told me of his friends—men, most of them, "good fellows, thorough sports" he termed them.

When I asked about the girls and women he knew, he seemed a bit uncertain. I wondered if he was afraid I would appear countrified to them.

He decided we would not live right in New York, but down on Long Island. We could commute in half an hour, and he said I would feel more at home than if I were cooped up in the city. I thought he was kind, considerate, to be so thoughtful of me—then.

I made no objections to any of his plans. Why should I? He would be with me, in a home of our very own. That was all I wanted to make me superlatively happy.

I supposed of course he would write at home, would finish his wonderful book where I could be with him constantly. But it seemed he had no such intention; he really appeared hurt that I should expect it. So he kept his little apartment in the city, a sitting room, bedroom and bath. He called it a studio.

He took me to inspect it almost at once. He had a large desk covered with typewritten papers, and a good many books. Otherwise it was no different from any other apartment. It was a comfortable place for a bachelor, he explained, when I begged to live there, but not room enough for two. So he rented a furnished house on Long Island, and we set up housekeeping.

I had a good maid, a car to use unless Paul motored into town, which he did but seldom. I wrote glowing letters home telling of my happiness.

Tommorrow—Unsatisfied Longing.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY

(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I came to you before, and received very good advice and I am going to bother you again. I am a school girl, and have gone with lots of boys. I went to a Hallowe'en dance three weeks ago, and met a young man, came home with him, and like him fine. He is lots older than I am and I want him to know my age and I want to write and tell him about it. Would or wouldn't that be proper. If not, why? What could I say? All I want to tell him, to let him know my age, and I would like to continue going with him. Would he think I was bold and would it be bold. Thank you for your trouble.

BLUE EYES.

BLUE EYES—You really want to write to him, and are trying to think up a good excuse, isn't that it Blue eyes? You will not further your cause, any, nor make him like you any better in writing those things to him, or in even mentioning them when you meet. By no means write to him, let the first overtures be from him, or he will think you very foolish indeed.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I have been going with a girl several months, and as she has a birthday I would like to make her a gift. She has very little money to spend on luxuries and I know has a hard time getting the things to wear that girls like. Would her mother object if I gave her a box of silk stockings. I know she hardly ever has a pair, and she would appreciate it.

X. X.

X. X.—Yes, I think a box of silk hose would be a very nice gift.

MOVIES

Liberty Theatre.

Broadway leers at the pretty, innocent girl just in from the provinces to launch her career. It laughs at and with the embryo playwright, poet and author. It listens to the music of the Tin Pan alley genius and smiles more or less encouragingly on the clumsy artistry of the would-be Whistler. It even pats the ham actor on the back and forgives them all for their sins as Broadway would have its sins forgiven.

But, on Broadway there is one unforgivable sin, one immutable law which must be obeyed.

"Thou shalt not go broke, or thy days shall be short upon the Rialto."

Thus it is when Murray W. Garsson produced "Broadway Broke," at the Liberty Theatre Friday and Saturday, from the Saturday Evening Post story by Earl Derr Biggers, released through the Selznick Distributing Corporation, he struck upon a theme in which all the world has an interest. For after all, Broadway is just the Main street of New York. Every town has one and they are all somewhat alike.

Antlers Theatre.

Richard Barthelmess fights in first screen duel with swords—and loses valiantly—in the widely heralded John S. Robertson production, "The Bright Shawl," adapted from Joseph Hergesheimer's powerful story dealing with Spanish oppression in Cuba.

This fight is described as one of the most gripping features of the First National picture, which will begin an engagement at the Antlers Theatre tonight. Barthelmess is seen in the role of Charles Abbott, a young American, who becomes interested in the Island's cause and throws in his lot with the Cuban rebels.

Dorothy Gish contributes perhaps the finest screen performance of her career as La Clavel. Anders Randolf is superb as the villainous Santacilla, while Mary Astor makes an altogether charming Narcissa. Others who add to the unusual picture are Jetta Goudal as La Pilar, William Powell as De Vac, Andre de Beranger, E. G. Robinson, Margaret Seddon, Louis Alberni and George Humbert.

Majestic Theatre.

Eva Novak, leading woman with William Russell in the Fox picture, "The Great Night," which will open at the Majestic Theatre tonight enjoys a large measure of popularity throughout the country. She has a singularly charming personality supporting her histrionic ability.

Miss Novak is a sister of Jane Novak and is a native of St. Louis, Mo. She has appeared in a number of Fox successes.

ARMISTICE DAY PLANS ARE MADE

Will Be the Biggest Day in History of Roseburg Veterans Declare.

HAVE FINE PROGRAM

"Night in Gay Paree" Show Is All Ready for Final Setting —Scenery Artists Busy Daubing Canvas.

Under the able direction of Roy Hutham, "champeen paint slinger" of the valley, the legionnaires are this week wielding a wicked paint brush in the preparation of the scenery for the "Night in Gay Paree" musical revue, which will be presented at the armory on the night of November 12th, as one of the feature attractions of the Armistice Day celebration.

"Deedie" Mathews, show director, is putting his bunch of home talent through some classy steps and the song numbers, reinforced by the Jazzy Umpqua Five, will be the latest hits of the season. The show will start promptly at 7:45 o'clock and last until 9 o'clock at which time the big carnival dance will "cut loose." Admission to the show will be 25 cents and for this nominal sum the legion boys promise some high class entertainment. A chorus of 25 beautiful Roseburg maidens, all costumed to fit the occasion, a "Night in Gay Paree," will dance through the entire hour of the show and the male members of the cast have been trained to do some real warbling in the background.

Roseburg will be the mecca on November 12th for all the World War veterans in Douglas county. The vets are going to be entertained in a royal manner and those who are not vets will get their money's worth by attending all of the festivities from the "opening gun" at 8 a. m. until taps is sounded long after midnight.

One of the big events of the morning program on that eventful Monday will be Ez Hoskins' Country Store. This country store will be loaded with all sorts of articles, ranging from hair pins to sacks of sugar. Everyone will stand a chance to fill the larder for the winter at the small cost of 25 cents.

The parade feature will be the biggest pageant ever witnessed in this city. "Vic" Petterson, who has been pleading with and begging every organization in the city to enter a float, said today that prospects were good for a four-mile parade. Fine prizes will be awarded for the best float. The school children are also taking an interest in this feature and will participate in the parade.

At noon the free chow will be served to the veterans at the K. of P. hall. Umpqua Post will be the host to the former gobs, leathernecks and doughboys and there will be plenty of chow to supply the inevitable "seconds."

In the afternoon the Elks football team will clash with the Cottage Grove national guard team. This game promises to be the best of the season. The Roseburg squad recently defeated the Grovers by a score of 6 to 0. It was a hard fought battle and the return contest here will be a regular bone-crushing affair.

Other features are being arranged for the day and the complete program will be announced in a later issue.

Umpqua Post of the American Legion meets on next Tuesday night and a big attendance is expected as final arrangements for the program will be made.

This is a Studebaker year.
