MERCY HOSPITAL EXEMPT FROM TAX

In a decision in the Lane county circuit court, Judge W. F. Mulkey holds that the hospital properties are exempt from taxation under the Oregon laws. Although the decision was given in a case brought in Lane county on the foreclosure of tax certificates, it applies to other counties as well. The hospital is strictly a charitable institution, he holds. Authorities are required to pay if they possess funds, when charitable work is done and such being the case the hospital because classed as a charitable institution and under the Oregon laws is exempt from taxation.

UNCLE TOM IS HERE TONIGHT

Leon W. Washburn's moderate revival of the original production of the Stowe "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the company that never disappoints, the one that never misrepresents, the one that sends you home feeling satisfied that you have had full value for your money when they say "Good Night," is announced as the attraction at the Artlers theatre, for matinee and evening performances on Wednesday, January 2nd, the matinee commencing after school dismisses. This season's production is said to be the most satisfactory and elaborately staged representation of the late Harriet Beecher Stowe's famous masterpiece ever presented for public approval. It is the only attraction of its kind, ever issued in its entirety in Europe and Australia, where, for several seasons, its success was one of the wonders of those countries. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" appeals to the hearts of every true American and the music of Stowe's in connection with it is a sufficient guarantee that you are going to see only the best.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was first presented at the old Troy Museum, Troy, N. Y., in the year 1852. [illegible] Theatre in New York and in Paris, as the Theatre Comique in January 1854. Temperance and Christian Halls, Purchases and Christian Halls in Richmond and it had preaching in them on Sundays during the year 1854.

It is the one play in the land that is our old Bible stories. Our Saviour this opportunity to have back the peace of God, another Eden, you must be attending this entertainment, the first "Uncle Tom" that ever came. It has been continuously during the country for over fifty years and there is not a hamlet, village or city in the broad land where the name Stowe is not known in connection with "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Fashioned Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, compounded at home, used to darken gray hair. Nothing else was so good for it. We don't know why some druggist does not put up this old reliable recipe in convenient form, but now it is easy to get it in the form of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. Thousands of people have found it the best way to bring back the dark, glossy and attractive

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Colds and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches, get busy with good old Musterole.

Everybody knows it is a counter-irritant that relieves congestion. Instead of the old mustard plaster without the blister, use Musterole with your family. It gives the same results as the old mustard plaster without the blister. Just rub it on with your fingertips. It penetrates and warms the tissues, relieves the congestion, pain, soreness, aching, tightness and stiffness.

Keep Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

To Mothers: Musterole is now made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

MANY PIONEERS ARE PASSING AWAY

During the past few weeks it has been noted with great regret that many of the old pioneer residents of this community have died, in various parts of the coast. One of those whose death brought sorrow to the community was Mrs. Irene Stratton Willis, formerly of Willbur, who died quite recently. She leaves many relatives and friends in this county.

Sarah Grubbs Smith, another former Wilbur resident, passed away recently in Washington, where she made her home for a number of years.

Mrs. Carrie Lane Haines, mother of Dr. Fred Haines, died in California and her remains were buried here only a short time ago.

And a pioneer whose death has been recorded during the last few days was Weller Wheeler, who died in Seattle. Mr. Wheeler was a member of the firm of Abraham and Wheeler, one of the early business concerns of Roseburg.

BIG SUM PAID OUT OF AUTO LICENSES

The high cost of automobile licenses is a large which is swinging motor vehicle owners today. H. S. Francis, manager of the Pacific Transfer company reported today that the cost to his company for licenses for their fleet of operating trucks, cost $353 for the year 1924. In addition to this approximately $300 was expended in gasoline expended on the vehicles.

'A WIFE'S STORY'

By JANE PHELPS

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Ruby Atkins marries Paul Norwood who already has dissipated a fortune. Born to money, he cannot get along without it. Two girls are born to them, Joan and Laura. As the years pass Ruby discovers her husband is visionary, egotistical, yet she never ceases to love him. Dave Logan becomes a friend of the family, although Ruby has been warned against him.

Paul leaves at time of war and Ruby is left to fight alone for five years. As Joan grows older she becomes almost unmanageable and once comes home intoxicated. Paul and Dave make light of drinking, of breaking the law. Paul has returned and soon the finances of the family improve, although, as always, Ruby knows nothing of the source of the income. Dave tries to sow seeds of distrust in Ruby's mind but her faith in Paul remains steadfast. The latter buys a country house in Ruby's name, and she is delighted to own something at last. Logan makes love to her and she orders him never to see her again. At a week end party Ruby overhears Clem Sanders, of whom Joan is fond, tell Madge Dearing that he would never marry Joan, that she drinks and that her father is a common bootlegger. Ruby fears Joan has overheard, is terribly distressed.

CHAPTER LV

I started to follow Joan, fearful she had overheard Clem's cruel speech. Just then Madge and Clem arose, Madge making some laughing remark about finding the rest of the party.

A quick revulsion seized me. They must not know I had heard them talk of Joan, of Paul—not then anyway. I must first know if Joan had heard. I could not follow her without being seen, so turned and went swiftly into the house, my cheeks burning with indignation, my heart heavy with pity for my beautiful, self-willed daughter.

Paul, my husband, a bootlegger.

The scorn in young Clem Sanders' voice rang in my ears. It was not, could not be true. Paul was so fastidious, so above being or doing anything common—and this—the lowest of all trades, cheating and defying the government, breaking its laws, selling poison for gain. I would not—could not believe it. It had been but a boy's way of making one girl sure he had no interest in another. But try as I would, I could not quite make myself believe. A thousand incidents came to my mind, harrowing me. Paul's determination to build a lock, the ships so often seen off the shore, the rockets, which more than once I had seen flare up, and recalled that when they had been seen Paul invariably took his nocturnal strolls; the rough, common looking men who had visited him, and our growing independence as far as finances were concerned. Paul's possession of large sums of money, and countless other things that gave truth to Clem's statement swept dreadfully through my mind.

I heard gay voices, the young people were returning to the house. Cold with fear for Joan, what she might do if she had overheard Clem, crept me to a realization that she was my first care. Paul was away. I could do nothing about what I had heard of him until his return. Trembling, almost afraid to look at her I awaited Joan. She came in laughing and chatting gaily. She was unusually pale, but her eyes were bright, and her voice rang out above the others, saying they must have some music before the late supper I had prepared.

Laura played for them and they sang college songs, the latest hits from musical comedies, and so on, and above them all rang Joan's clear soprano. I breathed a sigh of relief. She had not heard. My lovely Joan had been spared that humiliation.

As they gathered about the dining room table for a cold supper I watched her closely. It seemed, as it grew late, that her gayness was a bit forced, but I laid it to weariness; she had been on a constant jump all day that her friends should not have a dull moment. I was glad they were to leave early in the morning. She needed the rest, and I couldn't hide my anxiety over Paul, what I had heard, much longer.

When finally the goodnights had been said, and Joan and Laura had gone to my room to retire, I sat for a long time, my mind against a chasm at times, at others filled with incidents that seemed proof that Clem Sanders might be right.

I recalled Dave Logan's visit the night he and Paul seemed to be discussing, my husband's remark, that it "Might be dangerous, but that there was big money in it." Was Dave trying to urge him not to bootleg? He had also said perhaps I knew how Paul was caring for us—and that I condoned it. I felt as if I should go mad and as the clock struck two, went to my room. I would try to forget and sleep.

I thought I heard a sound from the bed, and wondered if Joan were awake. I bent over her but she seemed to be sleeping, and pressing a light kiss on her hair I threw myself on the couch and almost immediately fell asleep, exhausted with my emotions.

According to instructions the maid called me early, and all was busy confusion until our young guests had departed. Joan had been very gay through breakfast, and had called her goodbyes and her invitation to come again in so hearty a manner I was positive she knew nothing of Clem's cruel speech to Madge Dearing. And that she grew quiet, drooped, once they were out of sight did not worry me. It was only the natural reaction after her strenuous days of entertaining. Most of the day she spent on the water, or sitting in the summer house, while I prayed for and yet dreaded Paul's return.

This bus is specially built upon a Dodge chassis and is very neat in its design and appearance. The bus is heated and the seats are upholstered heavily, providing maximum comforts for the guests and providing a very satisfactory market of transporting patrons and their luggage from the station to the hotel.

LANE COUNTY TO STRIKE BOUNTIES

EUGENE, Jan. 2.—Bounties on predatory animals will not be paid by Lane county this year, according to an order of the county court made yesterday in finally adopting the 1924 budget. The item originally placed in the budget for the payment of bounties was taken out and added to the emergency fund.

There are differences of opinion as to the amount of good the payment of bounties does. Some claim that this is a wrong method of trying to lessen the number of wild animals that prey on domestic animals and deer, while others claim that whenever the bounty is eliminated such animals increase in numbers.

RELEASED FROM JAIL

Ernest Strickler of Reedsport, who was placed in jail recently charged with trapping without a license, was released from custody last night. Strickler was fined $25, but was unable to pay the sum, and consequently was forced to remain in jail for a period of seventeen days. He returned to Reedsport at once.
