Red Plane Meets Quietus At Last

SEOUL. — (AP) —"Bed Check Charley" is dead.

He was knocked out of a moonlit Korean sky by Capt. Richard M. Heyman, of Stillwater, Okla., the air force announced.

In a laconic release, the air force reported in part:

"Captain Heyman reported that his caliber .50 bullets raked the enemy aircraft from tail to engine before it disintegrated in midair. The entire action took place at 500 feet."

There'll be no tears shed over Charley's demise.

He was a pain in the neck, a pesky gnat, who kept a lot of people up late at night, disturbed the midnight calm of this South Korean capital.

He did have a touch of glamor about him. For "bed Check" was only a tiny, singe-engine plane, yet he defied the formidable American air force in Korea for many nights—until his number came up under a moonlit sky.

Actually "Charley" was two men.

One was the pilot and the other was a guy who sat in the back cockpit, wielding a Russian-made burp gun and dropping small bombs over the side.

For five straight nights "charley" strafed and bombed at one time or another Seoul, Suwon, Inchon and Kimpo airfield.

"Charley" would putt-putt over the hills and down the river valleys, flying low to escape radar detection. Suddenly, de'd appear over the city, his single engine breaking the silence. Then in a little while would come the whoop-whoops as his small bombs exploded.

Geiger Counters Used In Test Against Houseflies

SEATTLE —(AP) — Professional bugkillers are stalking Oregon flies with Geiger counters.

A. W. Lindquist, Corvallis, Ore., described the maneuver at he 35th annual meeting of the Pacific branch, American Association of Economic Entomologists.

Lindquist said the Agriculture department's bureau of entomology raised 40,000 houseflies, treated them with radioactive phosphorie acid, and turned them loose over the Oregon countryside.

The flies later were recaptured in baited screen traps.

How did the scientists know they had the same flies?

"They made our Geiger counters buzz," Lindquist said.

The experiment, part of a study of habits of houseflies, proved that they travel 12 miles in 24 hours.
