Mr. B. R. Richter, Miss Basford, and Mr. Porter were the judges.

The essays were judged on subject matter, originality, sentence struc- ture, spelling, punctuation, and pen- manship.

The following essay won the prize.

Abraham Lincoln

Oh, if that gentle mother who first pressed the precious burden of hu- manity to her bosom, way not in the wilderness of old Kentucky on Febru- ary 12, 1809, could have but known the great life work which the All Wise Creator had mapped out for her boy! What! the tiny baby which she held in her arms, and she an inmate of that rude cabin without window glass or doors, his name should ring down the ages in deathless fame?

It was true, but Thomas and Nancy Lincoln, the mother and father of Abraham Lincoln could not know. Yes, it is true that the memory of Lincoln will never die, but was an unworthy man ever known to receive the love, respect, honor, and the won- derful name from his fellow men that Lincoln has received? Indeed no, Abraham Lincoln was never known to receive a word of praise which any one can truthfully say was not his, but what did he do to receive this praise?

A few years after the birth of Lin- coln his father moved the family from Kentucky to Indiana. Here the whole family lived in a rude cabin. Lin- coln and his father literally cut, hewed, and shot the living for the family from the surrounding forest.

Lincoln's mother taught him to read from the Bible; the Bible was their holy book. His mother shared all of his joys and sorrows. Later she was taken from him—a blow from which he never entirely recovered. She died early, but not until she had firmly laid the foundation for the life of one of the greatest men whose name is recorded in history. Years afterward Lincoln, governor of thirty million people was heard to say, "All I am, and all I hope to be I owe to my angel mother." Is it any wonder that a man so humble, yet so great should have the love, honor and respect of all the people who inhabit the great- est land which was ever blessed by the Creator?

Soon after the great tragedy of the mother's death, Lincoln's father mar- ried again. After the marriage the cabin was fixed up much more com- fortably. The step-mother loved Lin- coln as she loved her own child.

Lincoln's mother had commenced his education; with very little help he completed it by long hurs of hard study. How patiently he studied and poured over his few books by the flickering firelight. He completed his education by studying for a lawyer.

Lincoln grew to manhood a brave, clean, honorable man. When he was a young man, he worked at various trades such as rail-splitting, working on flat boats, and store keeping.

How carefully he studied all things before attempting to do them. He al- ways wanted to be certain that he was doing the right thing. In Lin- coln everyone found a true friend. The poor, the needy, and the distress- ed came to him even while he held the president's chair. They came to him because they knew that they would receive loving sympathy and kindness.

Lincoln saw the long columns of slaves. He saw them cruelly abused and mistreated. To these wretched slaves he extended the greatest sym- pathy. He was heard to say that if he ever had the opprotunity he would do all that was in his power to relieve their suffering. How little did he then realize what an opportunity he sometime would have to aid them.

Lincoln's first love was unhappy. The death of the girl he was to marry, was one great tragedy of his life. Sometime after the death of this girl he married Mary Todd.

After a few years of popularity Lincoln was elected to congress. After this he mounted higher, and at last reached the president's chair.

Soon after his election the country plunged into the great civil war. In the darkest periods of the war Lin- coln did not falter but kept bravely on. He spoke these words to his cabi- net. "I have promised my God that I will do it." With these words he issued the immortal Emancipation Proclamation by which four million human beings stepped from bondage into freedom.

Oh, the sorrow that Friday, April 14, brought to the whole nation! The North lost her greatest leader; the South lost her best friend. While Lincoln was watching a play at an opera, he was shot in the back by an insane actor.

As life slowly ebbed from that saintly being, a moan of anguish swept over the North and South, which swelled to a wail as the grief from Europe crept over the moaning sea to mingle with that of her fellow- men. Yes, her fellowmen, though di- vided at times, grief swept them all into one sorrowing group.

He fearlessly followed the golden path home. Like the great sun sink- ing in the ocean it first sends its path of gold across the dark water and then silently and swiftly it sinks from sight, leaving only the moaning waves.

THEATRES

Majestic Theatre

There are a few of us today who can resist the lure of the melodrama. Occasionally we may openly pretend to a slight disdain, but in our heart of hearts, we all thrill respondently when the villain is bested and the hero conquers, and none of us can re- sist the appeal of hair-raising stunts and dare-devil chances.

"The Vow of Vengeance," which plays at the Majestic theatre today only is replete with melodramatic thrills of the kind dear to the heart of the really enthusiastic theatregoer.

Liberty Theatre

All the feminine fans who longed to see Harry Carey in "regular clothes" instead of the western outfit will be glad to know that their wish has come true. In "The Night Hawk" his latest picture, Carey is seen as a gentleman crook. But he can't keep away from the sombrero for long. Be- fore many feet have been unwound, he goes west and becomes the fight- ing cowboy once again.

There are thrills aplenty in "The Night Hawk"—in fact, there is double the amount. We get the thrills of the police raids, chase and plots of the underworld of the east, and the thrills of the fast riding and fights of the west. El Sang'rito, the wild horse furnishes a generous amount of excitement himself.

"The Night Hawk" was adapted by Joseph Franklin Poland from the magazine story by Carlysle Graham Raht. It is fine entertainment. At the Liberty theatre Sunday and Monday.

"HUNCHBACK" WILL OPEN TOMORROW

Only one day more to wait for one of the greatest motion pictures ever produced.

It is Carl Laemmle's mammoth production of Victor Hugo's master- piece, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and will open Saturday af- ternoon at 2:15 at The Antlers Theatre.

The featured players are Lon Chaney as "The Hunchback;" Ernest Torrence, who delighted the people of Roseburg in "The Cov- king, and beautiful Patsy Ruth Miller as "Esmeralda." There are 75 principles and more than 3,599 others in the cast.

There probably never lived an author with the dynamic power with which Victor Hugo invested his stories and of all his writings none contained more action or ro- mance than "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and the film version is declared by critics to be a master- piece.

"The Hunchback" will be shown for three days only, with per- formances daily at 2:15, 7 and 9:30 p. m., Manager Goux announces.
