THRILL HUNTERS

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER

CHAPTER 12.

Old Cappy Bond was not the only one who regularly telephoned Amy.

Hardly would his final grunt thump the wires before the limpid tenor Clare associated with Tony demanded Mrs. Dean.

They would talk briefly, the dancer being limited mostly to "yeh" and "sure." And Amy's voice would be rather tense as she promised to meet him, careless of previous engagements. The girl learned little from their guarded conversation excepting that they were much together.

And sometimes before two o'clock the light would flash and her mother would give Satterly's number. Then she'd listen to Amy carol "Dear boy," gayly, and pretend to scold him because he had not called her first.

His "line" with Amy was the same, Clare quickly saw, as it was with herself; he made the same pretty speeches, contrived identical artful silences, managed the familiar air of intimacy.

"Only it sounds different, some way,' she considered. "Is it only because those things seem odd when they're for someone else? I almost think he's just a little impatient sometimes. She shouldn't telephone him so much—but she ought to know that for herself. I fancy he's a tiny bit careless with her and not as sincere as he is with me."

She wondered if she thought that because she felt a touch of jealousy.

"When a man tries to make you believe he's in love with you, you don't like to know he's nice to another woman, even if you don't love him "back," she told herself, honestly. "Maybe I've always been sort of jealous of Amy. "But," defiantly, "why shouldn't I be? She's flirted with every man who seemed to like me excepting Ted. And sometimes I've imagined—but how silly!" Still she saw again Amy smiling at Ted while he looked away from shoulders gleaming under pink chiffon. . . .

After a time the conversation between her mother, and Satterly made her think of a duel, light and quick, with combatants striving for an advantage neither could gain. She spent many hours in her little, close room at night trying to figure out the object being that brilliant thrust and parry.

Suddenly the duel seemed to be ended. It was on the morning Satterly said, "Au voir till Saturday then—"

And Amy replied, "Till Saturday, Bob."

The shadow that had fallen between Clare and her mother appeared to lift and vanish that evening. They had dinner alone together, walking across to Broadway afterward for a movie. Amy was as lovable as only she knew how to be; not a trace of her dark mood remained. The girl stole glances at her vivid charm and was amazed at the change.

When she tried to speak of what had happened on the night of Ted's visit. Amy shrugged. "Don't lets bother with what's past, darling. There's always another day coming. Get what you can out of life as it rushes along."

It all was so friendly and delightful, so exactly what Clare had dreamed of having from her mother, that she began to tell a little of her ambition to be a nurse. She confided the fact of the Materia Medica on the table by her bed; confessed, a bit fearfully, that she had learned it a third of the way through.

Amy said, tenderly, "What a funny little thing you are! You're like your father, child; he was always moiling over something. Wanted to be a civil engineer, but we were too poor. That's why we didn't get on, I guess; he was a serious chap and I never could keep down to earth."

That saddened Clare; for the first time in her life she wished that she had known her father. If Amy could have loved him their life might have been so different. Too late now, though; too late after the "knightly years were gone.' . . . .

Her mother called her back from the hall to kiss her. "Val and I are going away over the week-end. Some friends up in the country."

"In the country? Who are they, Amy? I didnt know you had friends in the country?"

"Oh—" Amy was pulling out gray hairs, holding a mirror above her head. "What did you ask? Oh—the Hales. They're at Rosecliffe Manor up toward Greenwich. . . .

"Good night, lamb!"

FATHER OF LOCAL WOMAN IS DEAD.

Albert Engler Bell, aged 64 years, a resident of Portland, died on August 17, according to word received in this city today. He was the father of Sarah Bell, of Roseburg, also of Harry D. Bell of Jewett, Ohio, and Ralph Bell of Fullerton, California. The remains are to be brought to Roseburg on Saturday.

MOVIE NOTES

ANTLERS THEATRE

Kerry Shines in "Love Thief" With Greta Nissen at Antlers

When a shooting star suddenly bursts from its moorings and speeds across the heavens to die in a burst of flame, even the most prosaic person imaginable feels a thrill remaining after the phenomenon has passed.

It is with something of the same thrill that you will come away from "The Love Thief" at the Antlers theatre Friday and Saturday. The picture is a gorgeous trail of light across a neutral background.

It starts like a shooting star and immediately goes into action. It pursues its firm course growing more intense and suddenly, at the denouement, it flames brightly and fades out.

"The Love Thief" is a perfect story from the dramatic point of view. Norman Kerry and Greta Nissen act their roles superbly and with the delicate subtlety that court intrigues demand.

Some very spectacular shots, made by the new Schuettlan process, are very effective and should be observed if for not other reason than to take a peep into the future of the motion picture.

Through the story runs a very moving love story that ends as it should.

LIBERTY THEATRE

An unusually human and sound story from the pen of Gerald Beaumont, ably adapted by Jefferson Moffitt, gives Lefty Flyan a chance to show the stuff he is really made of in "Mulhall's Great Catch," the current FBO picture produced and directed for that organization by Harry Garson. Based on the heated rivalry between the police and fire departments of the same city, and culminating in the animated interest with which the two forces cheer on their respective favorites for the hand of lovely Nora McCarron, the story leaps from howl to howl with the agility of a comedy chamois, and a good half dozen stunning thrills are thrown in for good measure. If Mr. Flynn can get this sort of material right along, there is no reason why he should not be up with the laugh-provoking headliners in a short time—for his ability as a funmaker is extraordinary. Kathleen Myers, Harry Victor, Harry Arras and others make up a strong supporting cast. "Mulhall's Great Catch" is at the Liberty today.

TWO ARRESTED FOR DRIVING WHILE DRUNK

Charged with driving a car while intoxicated D. C. Dodson was placed under arrest early this morning by Officer Rausch. Dodson was in company with Ike Martin at the time of the arrest, Martin also being taken into custody but making an escape from the city officer.

According to the report made by the night policeman, he saw the two men driving very rapidly down Winchester street at 2 o'clock this morning, their car ranging with the muffler wide open and at an excessive rate of speed. He was not able to apprehend them at that time, but a short time later, found them heading north again and placed them under arrest, finding both to be intoxicated.

He took them to the city hall where Martin, he says, was so drunk that he fell on the floor. While Rausch was busy searching Dodson, who had become unruly, the report says, Martin apparently recovered somewhat from his "passing out" and slipped away, or else was "whisked" away by friends, for when the officer returned he found that Martin had disappeared. A search failed to reveal the location of Martin, and the officer stated that a warrant will be sworn out for his arrest, so that he may be picked up at any time.

VALENTINO HAS PASSED CRISIS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Rudolph Valentino, movie actor, has passed the most critical period of his illness, his physicians announced today.

"Mr. Valentino is making satisfactory progress," said the bulletin. "Having passed his most critical period, no further bulletins will be issued unless some unexpected development occurs."

The localized attack of peritonitis, which followed a double operation for gastric ulcer and appendicitis in Polyclinic hospital on Sunday, apparently made little headway. The crisis in such cases usually is passed in three days.

HEALTH BULLETIN

GETTING READY FOR SCHOOL.
(State Board of Health)

The child who is ready to enter school should be fit for the best that education can bring to him. The child should be free from all handicaps which may be prevented by intelligent care.

Too often when a child begins school, the teacher finds him handicapped because he has been neglected at home. Parents have failed to recognize that they are accountable and responsible for the proper development of their children. Children should receive a thorough physical and mental examination before beginning school. Slight defects, if discovered, can be remedied before serious or permanent injury develops.

Only a few weeks remain before the schools open to receive their youthful charges. This furnishes ample time for preparing the children for school. Freedom from disease and physical defects means greater efficiency and safety for our schools. A thorough examination of your child, preliminary to his entrance in school, may reveal defects, the correction of which will give your child a fair chance. Will your child be ready for the opening of school?

You have undoubtedly purchased school clothes, but how about his health? He should be in the best possible condition to start the school year. Has he been given a thorough physical going over, and have his teeth been properly taken care of? This fall some ten thousand children will enter school in the state of Oregon. Seventy-five per cent of the children beginning school will be found to have physical defects which are correctable. If these defects are neglected, they will permanently handicap the child. Now is the time to have these defects corrected. With the opening of school each year, there occurs a certain increase in the number of cases of communicable diseases, as shown in the reports to the Oregon State Board of Health. The child entering school is in grave danger of these communicable diseases as he has not been exposed to them while at home. There are preventive measures that will render the child immune to many of them. In order to give the child a fair chance, he should be carefully examined, all defects corrected, and immunized against communicable diseases.

RECRUITING OFFICER COMING

L. C. Thornton, navy recruiting officer, will be in Roseburg on August 19 and 20 for the purpose of enlisting young men between the ages of 17 and 35 years. Men accepted by him will be sent to Portland for final examination, and then will be sent to San Diego, California, for two months training and from there they go aboard ships or to the trade schools. All trade schools are open to the men entering the service. Those enlisting now will have an opportunity to visit the New England states the first of the coming year.
