Blood Poison

THE MOST DESTRUCTIVE OF ALL HUMAN DISEASES.

The poison ejected from the fangs of the rattlesnake is not more surely fatal than the virus of Contagious Blood Poison, which pollutes and vitiates the blood, destroys the tissues and bones and eats like a canker sore into the flesh.

This horrible disease appears first in the form of a little sore or blister; soon the glands begin to swell, pimples break out on the body, the mouth and throat become sore, making it painful to eat or swallow; dreadful ulcers appear on the tongue, copper colored splotches and other characteristic signs of Blood Poison come as the disease progresses, and the destructive virus takes deeper hold upon the system. The medical men are as sorely perplexed over the character of this blood poison as ever; they tell you to take mercury and potash alternately for three years, but the stomach of no human being can stand this treatment long; besides, they do not cure the disease permanently, as thousands who have tried it know.

WELLINGTON, KAS., Sept., 1900.

I contracted Blood Poison two years ago this fall, and was persuaded to try a medicine widely advertised by a remedy company in Chicago. I was required to pay a large amount in advance, and contractually say that I was worse when the treatment was left off than when I began. Reddish pimples would break out and fill with yellowish matter; copper-colored splotches of all sizes would appear on my body; my throat was so sore I could scarcely swallow, and my mouth and tongue were seldom free from ulcers; tonsils were swollen, and my hair was coming out rapidly. This was my condition when I began your S. S. S. I have used twenty-two bottles, and am feeling splendid. Every sore on my body has healed, and my appetite good. JAKE MARTIN.

S. S. S. is not a new medicine; for nearly 50 years it has been known and used for this dreadful disease. It has brought new life and hope to thousands all over this land; it will cure you as it has others. Send for our free book on home treatment and write our physicians about your case. We will help you if you will let us; we make no charge for advice, and all correspondence is conducted in strictest confidence.

S. S. S. is the only guaranteed purely vegetable blood purifier, and the only antidote for this particular virus. It purifies the blood and builds up the constitution. The appetite improves almost from the first dose, the sores soon show signs of healing, and the unsightly, dirty splotches and eruptions grow paler and paler, and finally disappear.

DOG WORKS MIRACLE.

HE SAVES A FAMILY FROM THE POORHOUSE.

(St. Louis Times, Mr. Alex Pratt, Proprietor the Talking Horse-Shoe Ranch for a Man, Woman, and Two Horses on the Master's Farm.)

This is a story of a dog that saved a man and his wife from the poorhouse. The dog paid for your brought conditions for a dog woman, large the table getting for a month, and even got down on the master's feet.

Pluto is the name of the dog, and he is a fox terrier. Now he performed these remarkable things in last mail by the owner.

"My wife and I came to Chicago about four months ago from St. Louis," he said. "We had been married only a short time when I lost my position as a drug clerk. I tried for two weeks to get work at any kind of employment, but I was unable to find anything to earn a dollar at. So we decided to pick up and come to Chicago. Upon our arrival here we got three rooms for $8 a month and settled down to housekeeping as soon as the furniture arrived.

"It was right after the holidays that we landed here, and I found the drug business very slower in Chicago than it was in St. Louis. There were a few advertisements in the papers from day to day for drug clerks, but it was always my luck to be too late. After the second week I began to answer any kind of an advertisement of fully worth. Being a stranger in the city I had difficulty in locating up places, and I was slow in getting in addresses because I did not want to spend any money for car fare. When I arrived there I had less than $50, and the little pile was growing smaller day by day. And by the end of March our money was down gone.

"Now I'll tell you about the dog. He is one that my wife raised from a puppy. I wanted to sell him to a friend in St. Louis when we left, but the wife wouldn't listen to it. She said she wouldn't come to Chicago unless Pluto came with her. He is a pedigreed fox and is worth $25 of anybody's money.

"It was election day, the 5th of April—I will never forget it—that my wife had a blue ribbon round the dog's neck and told me to take him out and sell him. We were flat broke and she thought I could get at least $10 for the dog. She or I a little which I left home and it occured to me if the dog knew what was going on. I brought him down to Madison and Dearborn streets and I wasn't there two hours before I sold him. He is such a prettily marked little fellow that everybody who passed stopped to look at him. I set a price of $10 on him, because I knew nobody would pay more than that. More than fifty persons asked me the price and when I would tell them they would walk away, saying, 'He's a nice dog, but I don't care to pay that much.' I finally came down to $5, because the wife was sick and in need of medicine, and I thought best to get it as soon as possible. A woman with gold-rimmed spectacles bought him and took his name. I didn't ask her where she lived, and I don't know to this day.

"The second day after that the dog returned home. Where he came from or how he got back I don't know. My wife was so glad to see him that she forgot her sickness for awhile. She was fondling the dog and talking baby talk to him when the thought occurred to me to take him out and sell him again. Maybe he'll run away from his next master and come back to us again. I said to the wife, and we both laughed heartily. I took the dog down in the afternoon and had no trouble in selling him again for $5. The next morning before we were up he was back at the little flat on Center avenue. He seemed to understand why he was being sold, and he expressed the approval of the scheme by laughing and talking. That may sound strange to some people who do not understand dogs, but it is a fact that dogs laugh and talk just the same as human beings.

"During the month of April I sold the dog seven times, getting $5 for him each time. If it hadn't been for him we certainly would have been compelled to apply to the county agent for relief. The wife was in need of medical attention, and it is probable she would have had to go to the poorhouse. The $35 I got for the dog paid the rent and all other expenses, besides buying a pair of shoes for me. I got a position the first of May, and I guess we will have smooth sailing from now on. All the money in the world would not induce my wife or myself to part with the dog, who really saved us from the poorhouse."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

PLAYED HER LAST CARD.

How Her Many Vexatious Finally Culminated on the Car.

One explanation is that she was not in a good humor when she took the car. She had seen a big man beating a little horse and when she had protested after the manner of an excited woman he had told her to "Gwan an' chase yerself," and when she got a policeman he would make no arrest until she had agreed to make a complaint and she had not gone forty feet before she met this rash pledge to appear in the role of a prosecuting witness.

The car started as soon as both her feet were on the steps and her voice was sharp when she told the conductor that every passenger had to make a run and jump to get aboard. For her part she wished that electricity had never been harnessed. People pondered eyes in the backs of their heads these days.

Owing to her agitated frame of mind it was not unusual that she should hand the conductor a plugged quarter, says the Detroit Free Press. He was at first disposed to pocket the coin and the implied reflection on his ability to look after the interests of the company, but her curt request for the right change was her undoing.

"This is no good to me, madam," he said, quietly; "it is plugged."

Being addressed as "madam" when she does not enjoy that felicity may have tended to break her up still more. At any rate, she announced that she had no way of knowing whether the good coin had only and that if she did she probably got it from some other conductor.

"You give it to him all right enough, I saw you," said the long-footed woman across the aisle.

The only reply to this was a glare that swept behind the volunteer witness. But the angry woman had another cutting to her lips. The conductor was leaning gaily. "Now then, sir," said there was a veritable riparian edge on her voice, "you go outside and shake your hands. We can do this thing up efficiently."

There was a little stung left within the conductor was rather than a top before as he ran the gauntlet and the question of the plugged coin was not renewed.

WRITE COLUMNS OF LEADERS.

Sir Edwin Arnold Could Fill an Hour's Stage with Them.

Sir Edwin Arnold, whose death long things has left this nearly blind, was one of the most prolific writers in England. He was for years connected with the London Telegraph, and it is said in the office that in his writing over 10,000 readers for the paper, in addition to which vast journalistic output he was constrained to write some twenty or thirty volumes of poetry and literature and to visit all parts of the world. It was through a single advertisement in the advertisers for a leader writer that Sir Edwin became connected with the "Longest Circulation." That such a man would very soon get to the head of affairs was a foregone conclusion. As an editor he was loved and respected by all who had to deal with him, for while his knowledge is prodigious and his judgment matured the contrary is unfailing.

In one respect Sir Edwin Arnold will suffer less in his affection than many might, for his memory is so prodigious that though crowding age may be feeble he will never lack the religion of reminiscence. A striking instance of Sir Edwin's extraordinary power in this direction has been recorded by Major Pond in his recent book in connection with the visit paid by Sir Edwin to Walt Whitman. The American poet had presented him with a volume of his "Leaves of Grass," and Major Pond in the presence of both was reading aloud a random line, whereupon Sir Edwin stopped him, observing, "Let me go on from there," saying which he took up the thread and without a break recited the whole poem. "Try me anywhere else," he said at the end, and Major Pond complying, Sir Edwin capped every line he missed without a break and showed his perfect familiarity with the book from end to end. No wonder that Walt Whitman was delighted with such a signal compliment from his fellow bard.

The Trees of Paris.

Paris is probably the only city in the world which has trees that bloom twice a year naturally. These are the horse chestnuts. There are seventeen thousand of them planted in the streets and boulevards, and twenty-six thousand horse-chestnuts. The trees of Paris are numbered, just like the people, the cabs, the animals, the lampposts and the satellites. These horse chestnuts have only been doing this trick for about five years, and only some of them have made a practice of it. These die, or apparently die, in the latter part of July, and all the leaves fall off. A month or so afterward they all come out into flower again and little green leaves shoot forth continually until they are nipped by the first frost. There is a reason for this, and the scientists worked over the matter for a long time to be able to explain it. Briefly and unscientifically, the trees lose their leaves because they are attacked by a little fungus which is blown upon them by the wind; then, being still full of sap, they start to put forth leaves all over again.

Turkish Rhubarb.

Possessing a savor all its own, we come on seeds of large cases full of big, irregular blocks of a bright yellow-colored root. "Rhubarb," says our guide, indicating it. "Ah! then it comes from Turkey?" we cry, joyfully, glad to display our learning for once, but our friend smiles contemptuously. "There is no such thing as Turkey rhubarb," he says, "and, what is more, there never has been." All the rhubarb of commerce hails from China, reaching us through Russia for the most part, but because in olden days it made its journey by way of Turkey, it became known as Turkey rhubarb, and Turkey rhubarb it will remain because of the conservative tendencies of the British public.—Good Words.

Young Choir Singers.

Grace Church, New York, boasts of the youngest choir singers in the world. Every Sunday afternoon a chorus of baby girls takes part in the service. The youngest two of this band are only 4 years old—hardly able to walk—and yet they chant in perfect unison, clearly and distinctly. Each small girl wears a full white apron and a closely fitting baby cap, and they are a picturesque lot.

In China.

Ah, now, at last, we made occasion to observe, the situation was perfectly plain.

The Chinese smiled bitterly.

"Then you can head of that out of it, after all!" exclaimed they.

We were left in no doubt whatever that this was a veiled sarcasm touching the derogations and the indemnities, but we professed not to be in the least out.—Detroit Journal.

Steel Houses for Venezuela.

A New York bridge company has taken contracts for about 100 portable steel houses, for shipment to Venezuela, where such structures, it is said, find a ready market in view of the frequent earthquakes. These steel houses, which are one story, weigh about twenty tons each.

Too Much.

The Young Man—I suppose, sir, that when I become formally engaged to your daughter you will admit me as a member of the firm.

The Father—Well, I don't know. I don't feel as if I could afford the expense of both of these things just now.

Some of Russia's Money.

In comparison of emigration there is a greater proportion of women in Norway than in almost any other country in Europe. The excess of 1,000 females over men in the census of 1900 should show that 70,000, while in 1875 this excess amounted to only 40,000.

The Limit.

Boston—I am having awful luck. I can now down to my last dollar.

Bostonian—Bilson, that's nothing! Well, if you are down to the last dollar of your last friend.

Just like Dick.

Enquirer—Your brother Dick did you out of $10 last night.

Miss Wearie—That's just like Dick. He's always doing some ridiculous thing.

Second to Two.

"Miss Strong," he began, "will you be mine? That is to say, so—"

She had inserted her lace brown in a flower.

"To—that is, may I be yours?"

"Yes," she said, with a smile.

Wild Life in the Home.

"Have you ever had any thrilling adventures, Penelope?"

"Yes. Once I stood on the arm of a couch to fix a window curtain, and the couch slid across the room with me."

No Show.

"What we want to do," said the worried man, "is to take money out of politics."

"Well," answered Senator Sorghum, "I have done my best in that direction. I have taken four or five thousand dollars out of it up to the present time."

The Present Talk.

Towne—You forgot to tip the barber just now, didn't you?

Browne—Oh, no! I always tip him before he begins work on me, and I give him to understand that the tip is intended for "both money."

A MONTANA GIRL.

She Was Pale and Bloodless, But Now Has a Good Complexion. Her Ailments Gone.

From the Pioneer Press, St. Paul, Minn.

From Florence, Ravalli county, Mont., comes a cheerful letter, the writer of which is willing to tell how she obtained the rich glow of health that thousands of women are anxious to possess. Before she found the right remedy she was in that pale, emaciated condition which doctors call anaemic, and which, if neglected, inevitably means early death. Miss May Smith, whose address is given in the first words of this article, says:

"About five years ago I became ill without apparent cause, and I grew worse until I was completely run down. The least exertion would bring on a very severe pain in the pit of my stomach. At other times I would have a pain in my head, something like neuralgia. My kidneys were very weak and my limbs always felt tired. I was troubled with shortness of breath and I had a pale, bloodless appearance. There was a smothering sensation about my heart, which would beat heavily, with fits of palpitation. For three years I was under the care of two doctors, neither of whom seemed to know the nature of my trouble. They treated me for dyspepsia, ulceration of the stomach, gastritis and neuralgia, but without good results.

"Two years ago, when I saw an advertisement in a St. Paul paper of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, I bought a box and began taking them. They helped me so much that I kept on with them until I had taken five boxes altogether, and became well and strong again. I gained in flesh and they gave me a healthy color. I have great faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and take them every spring and fall as a blood medicine and for the general building up of my system.

"I have recommended Pink Pills to many people who are suffering much as I was, and they have all been benefited. My younger sister, whose skin is pale and transparent, is now taking them to restore her color."

Signed, MAY SMITH.

Lapped It Off.

Towne—Has he sent you a check for your services?

Browne—Yes, but it isn't for the amount I expected, although I sent him a bill.

Towne—Your writing's bad. Maybe he didn't decipher the amount.

Browne—I'm afraid he did de-cipher it. I wrote $200 very plainly, and he sent $10.

No Suggestion.

"I must say," remarked the physician, "your husband is in a bad way. Any arrangements you may want to make?"

"Oh, doctor," she cried, "I could never think of marrying again."

Sorrows of Research.

"Did you succeed in finding any illustrious ancestors?"

"No, but I scared up a lot of kin folks that I didn't want to know at all."

Evolution Again.

"Advertisin' is one er de fun' laws of nature," said Uncle Eben. "A hen's business is layin' eggs, an' ev'y time she completes a transaction she starts right in to cackle."

Why a Woman

Is Able to Help Sick Women When Doctors Fail.

How gladly would we fly to our sick all the hot unfortunate a woman's feelings, brain, constitution, and peculiar organic disturbances.

These things are known only to women, and she alone would give to such at the moment.

To trust a sick property is to necessary to know all about it, and full information, many times, cannot be given by a woman to her family physician. She cannot bring herself to tell everything and the physician is
