Today's Pirate Pitcher

World Series Sidelights

The third game went a long way to establish the Yanks as the greatest baseball team of all time and it also knocked a superstition of two years' standing into a cocked hat. In 1925 Bucky Harris refused to put in Dutch Ruether, his only starting pitcher who had not seen service, because it was common belief that the Pirates were death or left handers. Herb Pennock personally attended to the matter of establishing the fallacy.

Last year Tommy Thevenow, a weak hitter through the regular National league season, led all the series players in batting. Mark Koenig, who finished the American league campaign with a mark of .286, has hit for .462 in three series games. Lou Gehrig alone tops him with an even .500.

Paul Waner, Barnhart and Ruth are all hitting at the same clip—.364, with 11 times at bat and four hits, but Ruth, with a reputation of being the American league's leading run scorer, has crossed the plate three times, while Waner and Barnhart have not scored in the three series contests.

Ruth has hit his 61st homer of the season, but it doesn't go down in the American league record books as such. The Babe isn't worrying, however, and believes the 60 will be good enough in his league for a while.

The fans had almost forgotten about Heinie Groh until he came up in the ninth with that bottle bat, choked half way up and his odd batting stance. His best was a weak pop fly to Pennock.

The right field crowd at the Yankee Stadium is well acquainted with Ruth. Every time the Bambino hits one in the air his favorite section ducks. The entire section was on its feet before the Babe's smash had passed the infield.

Ruth didn't look so good against Meadows. The Pirate moundsman was putting speed on the Babe's balls just to mix things up and the ones that crossed the plate were floaters. Cvengros tried to slip one by and while he failed on Ruth he succeeded against the next two batters, Gehrig and Meusel.

Pennock is the only pitcher on record with two three-hit games to his credit in world series competition, his first being against the Cardinals last year.

EARTHQUAKE IN LOS ANGELES

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 8.—A slight earthquake of about four seconds duration was felt in Los Angeles at 11:01 a. m.

MILJUS LOSES GAME BY A WILD PITCH

leaguers capture today's contest the series is summarily ended.

Not since 1914 has a world series ended in four games. These same Yankees failed to win one from the Giants in 1922 but they got one tie.

Only the most faithful among the Pirate supporters held out hope today for an eventual National league triumph. To capture the series the Bucaneers must win four straight games from a club they have not been able to stop once in three tries.

Optimistic Pittsburgh fans insisted that the Pirates would prolong the struggle beyond its minimum length by winning today.

In an effort to remain in the game Manager Donie Bush planned to send Carmen Hill, his bespectacled leading pitcher in games won, to the mound. Hill won 22 games and lost only half as many during the championship season.

Manager Miller Huggins was uncertain today whether he would call on Wilcy Moore to throw his famous "sinker" at the visitors or send in Waite Hoyt, who won the first game with some help from Moore. Hoyt's games won during the season totalled the same number which Hill was credited, 22, but the New Yorker was defeated only seven times. Moore won 19 and lost 17 but in the role of timely first aid physician saved a dozen more.

The probable batting order for the fourth game:

NEW YORK	PITTSBURGH
Combs, cf	L. Waner, cf
Koenig, ss	Barnhart, lf
Ruth, rf	P. Waner, rf
Gehrig, 1b	Wright, ss
Meusel, lf	Traynor, 3b
Lazzeri, 2b	Grantham, 2b
Dugan, 3b	Harris, 1b
Collins, c	Smith, c
Moore, Hoyt, p	Hill, p

Umpires: Ormsby (American) at plate; Quigley (National) first; Nallin (American) second; Moran (National) third.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—A drizzling rain that had fallen intermittently since midnight, gave every promise of stopping the fourth game of the world series between the Yankees and Pirates this forenoon.

The diamond in the stadium was drenched and even if the rain should cease in a few hours, it was doubtful if the field would be in playing condition. Despite the rain, a handful, of faithful fans, with raised umbrellas, hovered about the gates eager to purchase tickets for bleacher seats.

At 8:30 a. m., the rain stopped and the skies brightened a bit, but half an hour later, it started anew.

The weather bureau was besieged with telephone calls from various fans but Uncle Sam's men would not officially declare themselves until they had received more complete reports. They said guardedly, however, that their instruments indicated rain throughout most of the day, but that it might clear in the late afternoon.

Meanwhile the fans who counted on purchasing bleacher seats, took no chances and by ten o'clock 2,000 persons had congregated outside the gates. Most of them wore raincoats and rubbers. The fans who forgot their umbrellas made improvised capes from newspapers.

Yankee officials admitted prospects were dim but said final word on whether or not the game would be played would come from Commissioner Landis.

Shortly after ten o'clock, the local weather bureau announced that there was then a possibility of clear skies by noon. If the skies are clear at that time, the playing of the game will depend on the ability of workmen to get the stadium diamond dried out sufficiently to permit play.

Under the darkening skies it looked as if the fourth game between the New York Yanks and Pittsburgh Pirates would find the rival pitchers dominating the situation. Low visibility made it hard to follow the speed of the pitchers as they warmed up. Both Wilcy Moore and Carmen Hill mixed up a fast ball with their other wares. It was apparent that the batters would see more fast ball pitching today than in any other, except that in which George Pingras hurled against the Pirates in the second game.

After the batteries had been announced the band played the Star Spangled Banner while the crowd stood. The ground keepers still were working on the infield until the Yankees trotted out to their positions. There was the usual discussion of the umpires at the plate over ground rules. The reserved sections of the grand stands were filling fast. There were only a few vacant seats observable in the bleachers.

Among those going to Eugene to attend the Oregon-Idaho game today was Harold Wainscott.

COUNCIL DECIDES CONDEMN LAND FOR BRIDGE APPROACH

Fowler Street to Be Continued to Second Avenue South on a Straight Line.

Steps to condemn property required for the approaches to the proposed Fowler St. bridge were taken at a special meeting of the city council last night. The engineer's plans, providing for a bridge straight across the stream and the straight continuation of Fowler street to 2nd Avenue, instead of putting the road on a curve, were approved by the council. It had been suggested that the bridge and road be put on a curve in order to secure the right of way without extra cost, but the council felt that it would be a mistake to curve the street when it could be built on a straight line.

An attempt to reach an agreement with Mrs. Cardwell, owner of the property, failed and so the council decided to initiate condemnation proceedings and the recorder was ordered to post the required notices immediately.

PRUNE MEN URGED SAVE SAMPLES FOR DISPLAY AT SHOW

The committee in charge of the Douglas County Horticultural and Corn show to be held in Roseburg Oct. 26, 27 and 28, is urging prune growers of the county to save samples of fruit for display at the coming show. The premiums on packed prunes are exceptionally good and should attract the interest of the growers so that there should be one of the best prune exhibits the county has ever known.

The Pacific International Exposition opens on the 29th and the Douglas county state fair exhibit is to be shown at that time and it is desired to take the best of the coming show to the exposition, and consequently the show has been set for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, leaving Saturday open to afford an opportunity to get the display set up at Portland.

RADIO FANS WILL CONTINUE ATTACK ON INTERFERENCE

One of the best meetings of this year was held by the Roseburg Radio Club last night. The annual election of officers had been set for this meeting, but it was decided to extend the time for nominations and hold the election on the next meeting night, October 21.

The importance of choosing efficient executives was emphasized by the president, Henry Harth, who stated that without capable officials the club would be unable to carry out its constructive program, and the radio interference in Roseburg would quickly increase until reception would not be worthwhile. He regretted that many radio dealers, to whose advantage it is to have the air free from man-made disturbances, have not shown any desire to cooperate with the organization of fans.

The Radio Club plans to make the ensuing year one of greater service to the community, along both educational and interference lines. The test set used by the trouble-shooting committee is now being overhauled and the committee will soon be ready to trace any interference reported by radio listeners-in.
