WOMEN'S SCHOOL IN NEW YORK

Will Learn Something About Citizenship if Plans Are Carried Out.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. Oct. 12—Women voters of Connecticut will have a chance to go to school this month for a week's intensive course in citizenship. The lessons will be given in Yale University class room and Yale professors and instructors will give the courses. This will be the first school of the kind in this state. It will open October 24, and if deemed successful, similar weeks of schooling will be held from time to time. The Connecticut League of Woman Voters, Miss Mabel C. Washburn, president, sponsors the innovation.

One day will be given over to international relations, economic, social and political, and limitation of armaments; another to the fundamentals of American history; the principles and service of political parties, another to a study of Connecticut legislative processes, party conventions and caucuses; another to city and town problems.

Those who will lead the classes include professors who are among the best known of the Yale faculties as well as among the educators of the country.

FEW BIRDS THAT ARE NOT OF USE

Biological Survey Issues a Statement Showing That Even the Sparrow Benefits.

The sparrow is a beneficial bird, says the Biological Survey, United States Department of Agriculture, and should not be regarded as a pest. The single exception to the department's endorsement is the pesky English sparrow of that species, "usually a nuisance and often injurious," says the department in a booklet, Farm Help from the Birds, "it must be remembered that the introduced English sparrow is but one member of the large family of sparrows and its habits are by no means characteristic of the native species."

They are esentially seed eaters, the sparrows, but they consume also a fair proportion of insects, the department finds, and in general must be regarded as beneficial. Separating the sheep from the goats in the feathered kingdom of common knowledge to the farmer, the department places among the bad birds the jays, crows, ravens, and blackbirds, a corporal's guard compared with the army of good birds, of aid to the farmer, placed in the other classification. Even the bad denizens of the air have some good in them, says the department, and the damage they do the farmer is largely because of over-population in the feathered ranks. Of that class, the department says:

"It would seem a good policy to accord them the same treatment long given the common crow. The crow is not specially persecuted, neither is it protected. About the best that can be said of birds of this family is that on the average they do about as much good as harm."

"Owls as a group have long been persecuted by man but never has persecution been more unjust," says the department. And the service Biological Survey. More than 50 varieties of owls feed on a great variety of rodents and have useful habits, the booklet continues. In Washington, D. C., the Survey recently determined this loss is far outweighed by the destruction of harmful rodents.

Here is the menu, by variety and number of dishes consumed: Meadow mice, 1,119; house mice, 452; house rats, 134; other small mammals, 4 per owl. And the service done man by the barn owl, the bookletis of owls feed on a great variety let says, is typical of that performed by hawks and owls in general. An occasional chicken is consumed but what 675 barn owls had for dinner, by hawks and owls in general. An
