Origin of the Zulder Zee.

The Zulder Zee is a result of the bursting of the dykes. This happened in the Thirteenth century, and, in addition to Heijund being cut in two, and Friesland being separated from the rest of the country by a large sheet of water, hundreds of villages were submerged and about 80,000 persons were drowned.

Powdered Heroine.

From a Story—"A smile crept over her face." Probably the smile realized that if it went any faster it would kick up too much dust.

First Known Use of Soap.

The first mention of the use of soap was by Pliny as being made from goat's tallow and beech tree ashes.

Friendly Mixup at Princeton

Here's a little practice scrimmage for the linemen at Princeton, N. J., where instruction in preliminary tactics for this season's grid team already has been started.

INDIAN STORY OF FORMER DAY

(Special to The Observer)

"Indians?"

"I'll never forget the greatest Indian scare I ever had," said Robert M. Carlton, 77, 320 East 8th St., Long Beach, California, father of Mrs. John H. Hunter, of Union, Oregon, formerly a rancher of Cutlins, Montana, and an old pioneer of the Bitter Root Valley.

"It was during the hostilities of the Nez Perce through the Bitter Root and Big Hole country.

"One day my half brother, Reuben Holden, drove down with wagon and team and told "Ma" and I—

"'You can stay here if you want and get murdered, but I'll be damned if I'll leave these kids to be massacred by those red devils', and he made us all get in, taking us to Fort Owens, at Stevensville. The next day 4,000 Indians were camped on our ranch!

"After we thought the Indians were injected down, we returned home, but on our way we met several who were more or less on the war path. Once a bunch of them held us up with their guns and made us trade horses with them.

"The Indians were prowling around at night and causing much trouble. For six weeks we slept outside and hidden in whatever clumps of bushes we could find.

"Ma was nearly hysterical with the fear of the Indians, and to tell the truth I was nearly as bad.

"One night, after the cold weather had driven us back into the house, and the Indians were not so plentiful, although a few instances of depredation was still committed here and there, we heard a commotion outside. Some one was prowling around the house. We were sure that at least a dozen red skins must have been around for the noise they were making.

"We were holding our breath and had the kids as quiet as church mice. We heard them approaching the front door. They were on the porch! Yes, sir, we could hear them murmur! We even heard their breathe! All at once the door knob was turning! The door was pushed—they were trying to get in.

"I looked at the kids and I looked at "Ma," she was a livid white, trembling. I suppose I looked to her the very same, but all at once I sprouted up courage and said to myself, 'Bob, if you are a man you must protect your wife and kids!'

"Taking my old army musket with all the shell I could find and a good sized club, arming myself to fight to the death, I noiselessly sneaked out the back door. By the moonlight, I carefully peeked around the corner, onto the porch and, Lord! what did I see?

"Old Molly, our pet cow, was trying to open the door with her tongue stuck on the frozen iron knob!"

Umbrellas.

If you would improve the appearance of a shabby silk umbrella sponge it with a strong solution of sweetened tea. The tea revives the color.

Early Mediums of Exchange.

Paying for a purchase with goods was practiced by the Egyptians early in history. Later rings of gold and also of copper were used as a medium of exchange, these being the forerunners of the earliest coins.

Supreme Court Reconvenes in Washington

of German in their schools, and whether retail chain stores in Nebraska may purchase direct from manufacturers or only through wholesalers are some of the more important cases on miscellaneous subjects pending before the court. Patent infringement and related subjects contribute their usual quota to the court's business.

Oral Arguments Today.

Oral arguments were expected to begin today and eight cases will be disposed of during the remainder of the week should each take all the time allowed by the rules. The first case to be called for argument will be that brought by William W. Knights to test the constitutionality of the income tax law of Massachusetts, which was advanced by order of the court last term. It will share a day with five cases, also advanced, brought by the Consul General of Portugal to test the immunity of steamships claimed to be owned by his government from legal prosecution, on the ground that such claims must be settled through diplomatic channels.

Naturalization Case First.

The first case on the regular docket is that of Takao Ozawa brought from Honolulu to have determined by the highest court whether Japanese are "free white persons" eligible for naturalization. Last year when reached for argument during the armament conference it was passed at the request of the government, and notice has not been given whether a similar motion will again be made when it is called. It is considered that six cases, a number of which are pending to test the constitutionality of the Illinois statute under which indeterminate sentences are imposed in criminal cases, will be reached during the first week. These have twice been passed, and it is considered probable by court officers that when again called the court will be asked to dismiss them. The other cases which will be argued during the first week are considered of minor importance.
