LINK SCHOOLS AND HYGIENE

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—The public schools are the proper place to reach and teach mouth hygiene, Dr. W. O. Talbot of Fort Worth, Tex., said today at the convention of the American Dental association.

"Public schools were established primarily for economic mental training," he said. "Later developments dared to support and supplement the moral training of the child in the home. In more recent years as centers of population grew, with more children to the acre and a school next door, there was insufficient exercise for physical development. Then came the demand for athletics to supply the deficiency in exercise and to assist in building stronger and healthier bodies.

"Until recent years only a few places have made any special effort to teach mouth hygiene in the public schools, which is the proper place to reach and teach the masses. The campaign for clean and healthy mouths is spreading rapidly.

"The value of such training has been demonstrated beyond question. Special schools and some universities are now training dental hygienists to do health work in public schools and the demand for such workers is greater than the supply. The dental hygienist of today may be known as the health teacher in the schools of tomorrow."

Court Rules on Cider Made for Use in Home

cases could offer evidence to show that their beverages were not in fact intoxicating. This statement was interpreted by lawyers present as meaning that the burden of proof rests upon the government.

Ruling of Court.

Judge Soper's opinion in part follows:

"The question for discussion is whether the defendant, admitting that he made cider containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume; that is, admitting it for the purpose of this decision, but contending that it was made exclusively for use in his home, may offer evidence to show that the cider was in fact not intoxicating.

"While the question is not free from doubt, in my opinion such evidence may be offered.

"The doubt arises from the fact that congress seems to have used the word 'intoxicating' in a different sense in one section than that employed in another. Section 1 defines intoxicating liquor to include, among other things, any fermented liquor containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, which is fit for use for beverage purposes.

"Section 3 of the act makes it an offense for any person to manufacture any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in the act. Section 29 specifies penalties for violation of the act, and concludes with the following sentence:

"The penalties provided in this act against the manufacture of liquor without permit shall not apply to a person for manufacturing non-intoxicating cider and fruit juices exclusively for use in the home, but such cider and fruit juices shall not be sold or delivered except to persons having permits to manufacture vinegar. . .

Intent of Congress.

"It is obvious that by the concluding sentence of section 29 of persons manufacturing non-intoxicating cider for use in their homes and not for sale should be in a class by themselves, at least in some particulars, otherwise the sentence has no meaning whatsoever.

"If it was intended to punish manufacturers for manufacturing cider in their homes which contains more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, there was no necessity for the provision for the act without the sentence already provided such punishment.

"If, on the other hand, it is intended by congress that persons who make cider containing less than one-half of 1 per cent by volume should not be subject to punishment, there was no need for the provision, for the reason that the other provisions of the act did not provide punishment for such persons.

"The only reasonable explanation for singling out home manufacturers of cider for special mention in this section, to my mind, is that congress did not intend to subject them to the strict provisions as to the alcoholic content of the product specified in section 1, but intended to prohibit the manufacture of cider for home use, which should be, in fact, intoxicating.

"If the section is so interpreted then theer is a reason for its insertion in the act.

"In order that the decision on this point may not lead to misapprehension, perhaps I should also state that it is perfectly clear that if cider manufactured in the home, although it be exclusively for use in the home, it is in fact intoxicating, it is a violation of the law to manufacture it.

Cannot Be Sold.

"And also that the law specifically provides that cider and fruit juices so manufactured shall not be sold or delivered except to persons having permits for the manufacture of vinegar."

Luxurious Train Will Coax Tourists to Cuba

HAVANA, (AP)—A new train with dining car, bar, baths and separate barber shops and smoking compartments for men and women will be put into operation between Havana and Santiago de Cuba in January, according to announcement by R. L. Brannen, general agent of the Peninsular and Occidental Steamship company. Special coaches are being constructed by the Pullman company and the promoters claim it will be the best appointed passenger train in the world.

The new service is designed to induce American tourists to visit interior points instead of spending all their time in Havana, as most of them do now, and the project is backed by several railroads in the southeastern United States as well as the steamship company and the Cuban roads. The train will leave Havana on Mondays and return on Fridays, making a number of stops en route.

ALKALI LAND DRAINS HELP

Getting uncleared, drained "greasewood land" of eastern Oregon into pasture and using frequent irrigations have proved to be an economical method of utilizing the hard alkali lands of Malheur county, and affords partial reclamation.

Leaching alone is effective in removing the neutral salts but is not effective in removing the black alkali-sodium carbonate, or in improving the physical condition of the soil. Leaching and drainage in connection with chemical treatments are necessary in order to remove neutral salts resulting from decomposition of black alkali-sodium carbonate.

"Seven to 10 tons of gypsum an acre are required to neutralize the black alkali enough to get a good start of sweet clover. The application of 500 pounds of sulfur with 20 tons of manure an acre makes it possible to obtain a fair yield of rye and a good stand of sweet clover. Heavy applications of sulfur alone are effective.

Five tons of alum to an acre are required to soften the soil, lighter applications are ineffective. Manure is effective in combination with sulfur and gypsum, but not alone.

Four seasons of field and tank experiments with the natural hard alkali land of Malheur county brought out these facts. In connection with the experiments a method of sluicing deep drainage ditches was developed, making it possible for farmers with favorable condition to drain cheaply.

This work is a phase of Oregon soil and soil water investigations. The experiments are published in detail in experiment station bulletin No. 216. This bulletin is now available.
