RULING IN LESSARD CASE DUE SATURDAY

PORTLAND, Jan. 1.—(AP)—Circuit Judge John P. Winter will decide Saturday whether Dellmore Lessard of Multnomah county can serve as attorney for the veterans state aid commission and still retain his seat in the senate.

Arugments in the test case which may determine the status of at least 19 other lawmakers concluded late yesterday.

The state's case, presented by Ralph Moody, assistant attorney general, insisted it was not constitutional for a legislator to hold office in another branch of the government. He cited historical and legal precedents designed to show the same persons must not perform duties in the judicial, legislative and administrative departments.

Elton Watkins, one of Lessard's attorneys, said his client has no administrative duties with the commission and received pay only from applicants for passing upon abstracts and foreclosure papers.

"The people elected me for four years," Lessard said, "and I'm not going to lay down."
