tacked these Japanese cities at precedent shattering low altitudes, introducing new and successful tactics, with devastating results.

"Each flight was made without regard to personal safety in the face of ever present danger from enemy fighters and heavy searchlight directed flak. These missions were flown over excessively long ranges through weather that was often adverse and necessitated instrument flying and increased navigational problems.

Little Time

"There was ever present the possibility of mechanical failure and failure due to enemy action, necessitating subsequent ditching many miles at sea in hostile waters. The rapid succession in which each mission followed the other allowed a minimum time for rest and recuperation.

"In spite of weariness and fatigue, physical and mental strain, and the hazardous flying conditions, Sergeant Spencer displayed such courage and skill as to reflect great credit on himself and the army air forces."

Sergeant Spencer attended La Grande high school and was graduated with the class of 1933. He entered the service Feb. 10, 1943. He was reported lost April 16, 1945, while on duty with his squadron, 21st bomb group, on a mission over Japan.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Andy Botkin has a hobby

Andy Botkin, tavern keeper at the Garden Cafe, has a hobby. It's writing to all the service men who used to make his place a sort of club.

And do they appreciate it! One of them sent him a German combat helmet; another, a Jap flag. He's got pictures and coins and souvenirs of all kinds on the wall—mementos with "To Andy" written on them.

And he showed me the letters that he's got back . . . from homesick privates to reminiscent colonels. Letters about home and Main Street and the Garden Cafe . . . from men who remember listening to football scores on Andy's radio, sharing a mild glass of beer with friends . . .

From where I sit, Andy's doing a one-man job of boosting morale. Andy's spotless tavern, with its decent, homelike surroundings, is doing a job on the home front, too . . . in promoting moderation and wholesome relaxation.
