THERE seems to be nothing new or surprising in Adolph Hitler's speech to the reichstag yesterday. It had been adequately rumored that he would set forth certain requirements for a peace—and demand peace on that basis. That is substantially what he did. Furthermore it seemed quite certain that he really wants peace, at least until he has to use force later on to compel the return of the lost German colonies.

Will France and Britain accept Hitler's peace terms?

This writer does not believe they will. In fact it is more than likely their definite rejection of the peace offer will have been transmitted before these lines reach the printing press.

Why will this peace offer be rejected? Accepting Hitler's terms would be equivalent to admitting defeat. That would not be too bitter a pill to take though a little more spectacular than some of the other doses previously meted out by the German ruler—and meekly swallowed by the Allies.

The offer of peace is based primarily upon certain promises and assurances made by Hitler. Unless those promises and assurances can be counted upon without the slightest question, no permanent settlement would be obtained by accepting his peace terms now.

The fact is that the British and French governments can place no faith whatever in the promises of Hitler. In his speech he even repeated his old phrase, that he has no further territorial demands in Europe. He has made that promise before—not once but many times—and each time has followed it with a new demand and a new bite of territory. How, then, can the British and French accept a peace based on no sounder proposition than such pledges made by a ruler who has pledged before but whose pledges have not been kept?

That is the problem for the French and British statesmen to solve.

Yes, it does seem as though Herr Hitler desires world peace—the whole world, a piece at a time!

they try to take advantage of the opportunities provided by war in Europe for making temporary profits HERE.

But anyone who fails to understand that war profits are necessarily TEMPORARY profits will be very unwise indeed.

War booms are always followed by headaches.

THIS exceedingly conservative (which in these days means scandalously old-fashioned) writer hopes that such war stimulation to business as is probably inevitable in this country if the war continues over a period of years is NOT accompanied by soaring prices. Soaring prices will upset existing balances and throw us into a vicious circle.

It will work this way:

As prices rise, the cost of living will rise. As cost of living rises, wages will have to rise also. Steeply rising wages will mean that costs of production will rise, which in its turn will mean rising prices again. And so on.

Out of such a cycle NOTHING BENEFITS, and its inevitable end is a CRASH.

IT will be immensely better in the long run if prices do not rise steeply and profits are taken out of increased volume of production. That won't leave a headache.

O. S. C. FAVORED TO BEAT IDAHO TODAY

U. of O. Given Slight Edge Over Stanford; U.C.L.A. Faces Huskies.

CORVALLIS, Ore., Oct. 7.—(AP)—The University of Idaho, sporting a two-year winning streak over Oregon State college, will go after a third in a row when the vandals meet the Beavers in a Kings-X Pacific coast conference game today.

Oregon State was heavily favored because of its 12-0 victory over Stanford last week.

Idaho was without Kamolvicz and Piedmont, regular left guard and tackle, who were injured. Kohler, halfback, Kisselburgh, fullback, and Summerville, quarter, were nursing bruises but were expected to play for the Orangemen.

PORTLAND, Oct. 7.—(AP)—Occupying the unfamiliar position of favorite, the University of Oregon football team meets Stanford at Multnomah stadium today in the second Pacific Coast conference game for both schools.

The Webfoots executed one of the major coups of last Saturday's opening round of games by tieing Southern California, 7-7, which caused them to make a slight choice today over an Indian team that dropped its opener to Oregon State, 12-0.

Occasional showers yesterday and a prediction of unsettled weather today gave promise of a soft field.

SEATTLE, Oct. 7.—(AP)—Last week the University of Washington was a 16-7 favorite to beat Pittsburgh. The Huskies lost.

This week UCLA's Bruins are 10-7 favorites over Washington. Whether the Huskies or the odds will run true to form will be decided this afternoon in the first Pacific Coast conference game for both schools.

Washington will be outweighed in both line and backfield. The Huskies have no passers to match Kenny Washington, the Bruins' black ace. The Huskies have no plungers to match Ken Overlin, Bruin fullback. The Huskies have Ernie Steele, Mercury-footed soph, to match against "Blackjack" Robinson, the 9.8 man in the Bruin backfield, and if Robinson breaks away this afternoon, Steele will be about the only sprinter in the stadium with a chance to catch him. This also goes vice versa.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 7.—(AP)—Southern California's Trojans determined to prove their championship calibre, meet Washington state in a Pacific coast conference game today.

Battled to a 7-7 tie by Oregon a week ago the lads of Troy hoped to justify preseason predictions which ranked them title-bound this season.

Here Yesterday—Mr. and Mrs. Earl Strong and daughter, of Rice Hill, were visitors here yesterday.

Arrive From East—Mrs. James Beaton and her friend, Mrs. Greenway, of Brownville Junction, Maine, arrived in Roseburg Wednesday to visit the former's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. K. R. Metzger, on Brockway street. Monday the visitors from the east and Mrs. Metzger and her mother, Mrs. G. W. Eales, will go to San Francisco to attend the Golden Gate fair, after which the latter two will return to Roseburg and Mrs. Beaton and Mrs. Greenway will go to Los Angeles for a short visit. The four will be joined in San Francisco by Mrs. Beaton's and Mrs. Metzger's sister, Mrs. Ora Paul, of Los Angeles. Following a visit in Los Angeles, Mrs. Beaton and Mrs. Greenway will return to Roseburg to get Mrs. Eales and take her home with them to Maine. Mrs. Eales has been spending the last several months here at the Metzger home.

Daily Devotions
DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." What kind of thoughts do you think habitually? Do you know that a man's life is controlled by his thoughts? Like the rudder that governs the course of a ship, so is a man's mind in directing the course of his life. The man to whom God granted wisdom above all men, once said as we think in our heart so are we. What do you think about? What occupies the uppermost and the largest place in your thinking? If you have a worldly mind, inevitably your speech is bound to be worldly, so will your actions and your character. If your mind is selfish your whole life will be self-centered. If you possess the mind of Christ then your whole life will be Christlike. Even the imaginations of a man are clearly manifested in his character and they are plainly apparent in every detail of his daily living. How true it is that a man's thoughts is the helm that controls the whole direction of his course. To fully understand the mind of Christ, one must live with Him intimately and constantly and understandingly. Then we come to be like Him in thought and word and deed. Thus we may say, now are we the sons of God. Grant us this favor in Jesus name. Amen.

In Town Yesterday—W. D. Love, of Garden Valley, was in town Friday attending to business.

Mr. Lindbloom in Town—Gus A. Lindbloom, of Dixonville, spent Friday in this city on business.

Here Shopping—Mrs. Donna Ferguson, of Garden Valley, spent yesterday in this city shopping.

In Town Friday—Thomas and Donald Ollivant, of Lookingglass, were business visitors in this city yesterday.

Return to Longview—Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Collins have returned to their home in Longview, Wash., following a visit here with the latter's mother and sister, Mrs. Edyth Gilmour and Miss Virginia Gilmour.

Apply for Bounty—Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Stoble, of Camas Valley, applied to County Clerk Roy Agee yesterday for bounty on a cougar and Robert D. Hunt, of South Deer creek, applied for bounty on a coyote.

On Inspection Tour—A. B. Hastings, of the U. S. forest service department at Washington, D. C.; John D. Woods, of the Oregon Forest Fire association, and T. H. Burgess, of the U. S. forest service, both of Portland, spent yesterday here on an inspection tour of fire associations.

Leave for Portland—Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Black left yesterday for Portland, where the former will attend the credit bureau convention until Sunday. They were joined at Drain by Mrs. Ada Drain, of that city, and Mrs. J. A. Black, of Elkton, who will spend the week-end in Portland.

R. H. S. GRIDSTERS BATTLE REEDSPORT

Local Eleven Determined on Victory to Launch Football Season.

A band of 23 Indian gridsters, accompanied by Coaches Jim Watts and John Barney, departed this morning by school bus for the lower Umpqua, where they will meet a veteran Reedsport football team on the Chinook field this afternoon in a conference battle, the first game for the Indians this season.

Reedsport, undefeated and untied so far this fall, will attempt to preserve its perfect record by turning back the Roseburg invaders, but according to Coach Watts the Chinooks will have their work cut out for them, win, lose or draw. Watts' warriors have been pointing for this game since the initial turnout early in September and are determined to open the 1939 season with a victory over the Chinooks.

Probable Lineup Given.

Barring last minute changes, Coach Watts indicated late last night that he would start today's game with his five veterans, three reserves who saw some action in 1938, and a trio of newcomers who have won their assignments after a battle with a number of new men. The lineup will consist of Ray Puckett, left end; Wayne Albertus, left tackle; Larry Anderson, left guard; Bert Shoemaker, center; Dick Reynolds, right guard; Don Perry, right tackle; Bob Davis, right end; Virgil Sanders, left half; Eddie Nordyke, right half; Hershel Byrd, fullback, and Bob Norton, quarterback.

Besides those that will start the game, the traveling squad consisted of Burt and Atterbury, ends; S. McLaughlin and Cox, tackles; Barker and Garhart, guards; DeBernardi, center; E. McLaughlin and Shanklin, halfbacks; Cacy, quarterback; Carson, fullback; Mallery and Erno, managers.

SCORES OF FRIDAY FOOTBALL GAMES

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—(AP)—The passing arm of Marion Pugh gave the Texas Aggies a fourth-quarter touchdown and a 7 to 2 victory over the Santa Clara Broncos in a football game here last night.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 7.—(AP)—College of the Pacific demonstrated to venerable Amos Stagg last night that its victory over great University of California was no fluke by matching strong Loyola of Los Angeles blow for blow to earn a 13-13 tie.

SALEM, Ore., Oct. 7.—(AP)—Although each team had several scoring opportunities neither could cash in and Portland and Willamette universities battled to a 0-0 football tie last night.

● SERIAL STORY

Murder on the Boardwalk

BY ELINORE COWAN STONE

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

CHRISTINE THORENSON — came to visit her cousin, found a mystery.

BILL YARDLEY—had a reason for watching Christine.

GEORGE WILMET — employed Christine as a Boardwalk artist.

CHANDRA—looked into the future—and into the past.

Yesterday: Newspapers brand Christine "Mystery Girl" of the Talbert murder. At her room she finds a sheaf of $1000 bonds hidden in her suitcase. She tries to tell Bill. He cuts her off with, "Bill Yardley's shoes fit the prints found by the police."

CHAPTER XI

"Oh, Bill—no!" Christine cried miserably.

"And then some." His voice was a little grim. "But at any rate, I'm still in circulation. And I've got a little sleuthing of my own to do while I am. I'll be sewed up tight till noon; but how about meeting me for lunch about 12:30 at the same place where we ate last night?"

Christine said, "I'll be there, Bill," and hung up, trembling a good deal.

But Inspector Parsons she remembered after a moment, did not arrest people for murder until he was sure they would stay arrested. . . . And she had business with Inspector Parsons herself, as soon as she could find him.

Just outside her own front door she had to snub three reporters. She was not sufficiently experienced to dodge the news cameras.

She was admitted to Inspector Parsons' office at once. He looked Christine thought, as if he had hardly slept; but he was as cool and alert as ever.

"I've come to tell you," she began, "that I've been a good deal of a fool."

"You—and several others," he agreed pleasantly.

"Last evening," Christine hurried on, "I went to a public reading by a clairvoyant called Chandra—"

"And he told you," the inspector put in with a tired smile, "among a lot of other things you didn't believe any one but yourself could possibly know, that you were going under an assumed name?"

"Why — yes," Christine admitted; "but he also told me something that may surprise even you, Inspector—that someone had disturbed my things at the Crestview."

"So you have called to tell me that it was Chandra's dagger you found so opportunely last night. . . . A little late, isn't it?"

After a startled breath, Christine asked, "How do you know that it is his?"

"Practically every one in Surf City has seen that dagger. You drew his picture yesterday. Artists don't miss picturesque details like that. . . . I wonder if you would be interested if I told you that two hours after that merger between Amalgamated and National went through yesterday, this Chandra sold a piece of land he's been paying ruinous taxes on for years to the reorganized company, for a new plant they're planning."

"Then you've arrested him?"

"Not yet. . . . That dagger was a little too obviously a planted clew."

Christine thought in sudden panic. Can he imagine that I put it there?

"It didn't occur to you, I suppose," she said, "that as shrewd a man as he might have planted it himself—guessing that the police would reason that way?"

"It did," the inspector told her wearily, "even after our medical officer told us that Mrs. Talbert was not stabbed in that booth at all, but was brought there after the murder."

"Oh!" Christine said blankly. Then she rushed on in her eagerness to get on with her own errand. "But what I really came to tell you is that, when I did examine my things, I found these hidden away among them."

She pushed the envelope across his desk.

He opened it, riffled through the contents; then looked up, a frown between his brows.

"And," Christine finished hastily, "I haven't any idea who put them there or whose they are, if that's what you're going to ask."

He glanced from her to the papers and back again with such cool, mirthless amusement that Christine thought in sudden panic, He's found something I missed. I should have looked more carefully.

"You mean," the inspector demanded, "that you don't know that these bonds were the property of your cousin?"

After a moment's blank consternation, Chrbstine shook her head wordlessly.

"Well, now that I have told you, does it suggest anything to you that you had not thought of before?"

"But," Christine hazarded, "if someone killed her for those, why wouldn't he keep them?"

"There are other reasons for murder besides robbery, Miss Thorenson. Suppose Mrs. Talbert was not killed for the bonds after all, but from any one of a number of other motives. . . . In such a case, mightn't the guilty person reason that the smart thing to do was to make it seem as if she had been robbed by someone else—especially someone who might be thought to have a motive for the murder. . . . You, for instance, Miss Thorenson—with a fortune at stake if that will is authentic."

When she only stared at him without speaking, he went on, "Or supposing the bonds do explain Mrs. Talbert's death, perhaps the murderer thought that, after the first shouting was over, he could get them from you as easily as he left them with you. . . . Perhaps," he added softly, "it was even someone whom counted on your keeping them safely for him."

"You—you can't believe that, Inspector Parsons."

"Frankly, I don't know what I believe except that finding these has completely changed the complexion of this whole business. I have been supposing that your cousin's death was tied up with her opposition to the Amalgamated-National merger. Now it begins to look as if it had only been very neatly timed to look that way—or planned to suggest anything except what's really back of it. . . . Have you read the papers, Miss Thorenson?"

"Yes," Christine told him, dreading she hardly knew what. "That is—the extra, after I left here early this morning."

"Then perhaps you saw that your cousin's shoes had been found to fit one pair of those footprints leading from that stranded rowboat toward the booth where she was found?"

"Yes."

And Bill's shoes, Christine was remembering, fitted the other pair.

"That story happened to be true, except," Inspector Parsons was going on, "that they weren't made by the shoes she was wearing; but another pair, identical in measurements with one slightly broken heel. We haven't found those shoes yet; but we are reasonably sure that they were taken from your cousin's house by someone who entered it after it was closed the other evening—taken for the express purpose of making that false trail."

"You mean that my cousin's house has been broken into?"

"I didn't say that. It was entered by someone who had a key."

When Christine did not speak, he demanded, "Do you happen to have a key to Mrs. Talbert's house, Miss Thorenson?"

Christine moistened her dry lips and said, "No," hating the woodenness of her own voice as she spoke.

When she began to think he would never go on, he asked, "Do you know anyone else who has one?"

"No," Christine said woodenly again.

Then she thought, But of course—Jaspar.

The inspector shrugged and demanded with one of his disconcerting shifts of subject, "Was your cousin's vision particularly poor?"

"I don't know. . . . Of course she wore glasses."

"Do you know who her optician was?"

"I don't, but Jasper would, of course. He knows more about her affairs than anyone else."

"Jaspar?" He glanced at some notes on his desk. "Oh, yes. That's the name of Mrs. Talbert's butler. We haven't been able to get in touch with him yet."

"Oh, yes you have," Christine drew a deep breath.

Now she was in for it.

DANCE HALL PLANS AMATEUR CONTEST

Thomas Hartfiel and Le Von Baker, managers of the Oriental gardens, announced today that plans are being made to conduct a county-wide amateur contest in connection with the regular Wednesday night dances at the newly opened hall. It is expected the first of the series of contests will be held Oct. 18, although plans still are in the formative state. Prizes will be awarded, it was stated, to amateur entertainers who compete.

The Oriental Gardens have been drawing large crowds to the dances held each Wednesday and Saturday nights. The hall has been remodeled and attractively decorated in oriental style.
