Eskimo Children Have Toys of Rare Beauty

Eskimo youngsters possess tiny spears and fish hooks cut from walrus bones, small crossbows with ivory-tipped arrows, beautiful little kayaks about a foot long, cleverly fashioned from skins and manned with carved ivory hunters. Each one holds a paddle of bone, a bone harpoon, a wee float of sealskin and delicate hide lariats.

Little sleds of ivory, only a few inches long, yet perfectly formed, with several ivory dogs hitched with reindeer harness, are treasured possessions of Eskimo boys. Deer, whales, bears, seals—all sorts of queer fish and birds—are carved from pure ivory and given to the children at Yuletide. Beautiful little ivory birds of the Far North, penguin and murre, are cut so delicately from ivory as to astonish the examiner.

There are ivory thimbles for the girls, tiny ivory pins for their coarse, black hair, toggles or clasps for fur belts, shopping bags of white fur from the Arctic hare.

Some boys have a marvelous drum made of a thin strip of whalebone bent to form a circle. Both sides are covered with tightly stretched shark skin. Two little walrus bones are drum sticks and no snow igloo can contain the noise that radiates from the instrument.

Many of these toys reach American cities but are sold in curio shops and are far too expensive for Santa Claus to distribute.—Boston Herald.

Investment in Pearls Brought Rich Returns

Some years ago a woman received as one of her Christmas presents a pearl necklace from her husband. Not being in opulent circumstances, he was unable to spend more than $25 for them, but their luster pleased his wife, however, and for some years she wore them many many times until recently the string broke and she carried them to the same jeweler to be restrung.

She had hardly reached her home when she received a telephone call from the senior partner of the firm who asked her to call the next morning. To her amazement, she found that what she thought were excellent imitations were the real thing and valued at about $5,000. They had been sold by an inexperienced salesman, it appeared.

Leaving the jewels she returned home and several days later was the recipient of a letter from the jeweler containing a check for $1,000 and a box containing another string of pearls worth three or four times as much as the original price paid for her first necklace.—Spring field Union.

First English Bible

John Wycliffe, first man to translate the Bible into English, was sixty years old when he finished his task. The work belongs to the final period of his life, that time during which he was greatly persecuted by both the church and state. The Wycliffe version was addressed to the entire English people, high and low, rich and poor. This is proved by the character of the copies that have survived. About thirty of these remain and some are large folio volumes, handsomely written and illuminated in the best style of the period. Others are plain copies of ordinary size for private persons or monastic libraries.—Detroit News.

Beryllium

The bureau of mines says that beryllium is a rare metal and is found in considerable quantity only in one mineral—beryl, which contains only at the most about 5 per cent of beryllium. The process of extracting the metal is expensive and difficult. At present it is quoted at about $200 per pound. There is no market except for experimental purposes. If there were a definite market it is possible that it could be made for $15 or less per pound. It is not magnetic. It is a fair conductor of electricity, and is not stronger than good steel. As it is easily oxidized by heat, it would be difficult to cast.

Sneak Day Is Put Under Ban

Senior sneak day, which has been an institution in Cottage Grove for many years, has been put under the ban by the school board, which has adopted a resolution declaring the board to be opposed to school picnics on school time without the approval of the superintendent. At the same time the board went on record as opposing the use of private cars as means of transportation to picnics except when approved by the superintendent and board of directors. The board has also ruled that all school picnics must have the approval of the superintendent and the board as to time, place, chaperons and means of transportation.

In recent years the seniors have gone long distances for their sneak days, private cars being used. This year two cars were severely damaged and several students injured. The owner of one of the cars was put to an expense of several hundred dollars on account of damage to his car and injury to the occupants. One of the injured pupils has just returned to school after an absence of three weeks.

Grade Schools Present Successful Operettas

A large number attended the two operettas given last Thursday night by the grade schools of the city and those attending reported the entertainment a success. The singing, dancing and colorful costumes of the little actors won favor with the audience.

"In a Florist's Window" was presented by the pupils of the first six grades of the west side school. Miss Glenda Ross was accompanist. The choruses were composed of florists, bugs, roses, bees, daffodils, columbines, pansies and violets. The synopsis of the operetta is that while the florists are gone for fresh flowers, two little green bugs enter but reluctantly decide to leave, groups of flowers appear and arrange themselves in the window. Even a little mustard flower steals in with the daffodils. The florists rejoice at the beauty of the window.

"The Smuggleman," an operetta in two parts, was given by pupils from the first six grades of the east side school. Mrs. Ruth Haldeman was accompanist. The first act is in the morning and Billy and Toots plot to run away in retaliation for being denied more jam. Some Mother Goose children pay a visit. Knights appear searching for good children. In the second act at dusk gnomes are seen at play. The smuggleman carries away Toots and Billy. The mothers of the two appeal to the fairies for aid. The knights again ride by and the smuggleman is finally captured and all sail away in the twilight boat.

Between $60 and $70 was netted by the production, the proceeds to be used toward buying supplies for the grades.
