ernment against Lewis is really a criminal action instead of a civil one. Again Judge Goldsborough cut in.

"The restraining order," he said, "was not issued for the purposce of punishing a contempt of the Smith-Connally act, but for the purpose of letting the court decide WHETHER THE COAL CONTRACT WITH THE GOVERNMENT COULD BE TERMINATED."

YOU will remember, of course, the famous trial in which Solomon sat as judge.

The parenthood of a baby was at issue. TWO women contended they were the mother. Each had good arguments. The arguments were well presented. Much time was consumed.

But it seemed to Solomon that the big point at issue was: "WHO BORE THE BABY." So he tried an experiment. Calling a court attendant, he gave him this order:

"It seems that both women have proved, by sound arguments, that they are the baby's mother. So cleave the child in two with your sword, and give to each woman her half."

The justice of the order was acclaimed loudly by one woman, but the other threw herself at Solomon's feet and pleaded with him to give the child to the other claimant BUT KEEP IT ALIVE AND WHOLE.

Whereupon WISE SOLOMON ordered it given to her.

THE point is this:

Solomon's methods were unconventional—BUT HE WANTED TO KNOW WHO THE CHILD'S REAL MOTHER WAS, so that justice might be done.

Judge Goldsborough's methods seem to us laymen to be quite out of the usual groove, but he appears to be seeking an answer to these questions:

"Did or did not the government of the United States have a valid contract with Lewis and his miners obligating them to go on producing coal as long as the government holds possession of the mines?

"If so, did Lewis VIOLATE the contract by his notice of termination?"

THEY are important questions. They go to the REAL root of the whole matter.

Most of us will be willing to forgive the unconventionality of Judge Goldsborough's methods if they result in getting these fundamental questions honestly and plainly answered.

Linn County's Welfare Program Facing Crisis

ALBANY, Ore., Dec. 2. —(AP)— Linn county was faced today with a choice of cutting public welfare past the danger point, or transferring funds earmarked for county projects into the emptying relief coffers.

Mrs. Ruth Cooter, county public welfare administrator, said rising costs have so depleted welfare funds that the general assistance budget, which supplies all medical costs, is overdrawn. Cancer treatment, she said, has made heavy inroads on the budget—to the point where it may become necessary simply to let cancer sufferers go untreated.

Willamette Mills Have Huge Supplies of Logs

EUGENE, Ore., Dec. 2. —(AP)— Huge log stocks that will keep Willamette valley mills operating for five to 22 weeks, regardless of whether freezing weather halts logging operations, were reported today after a survey of 80 mills.

The Willamette Valley Lumbermen's Assocation said the mills, with a weekly capacity production of 33,810,000 board feet, have 294,415,000 feet in storage.

Canada is the world's second largest exporting nation.

A NEW OVERCOAT

By CHARLES V. STANTON

We formerly found humor in these frequent cartoons which use as a theme the danger of disappearance of an overcoat around an eating establishment. But the subject has gone sour. We have become a victim and our sense of humor has been most seriously affected.

While in Portland recently we ate in one of that city's finest hotel dining rooms, and while so engaged someone exchanged topcoats with us.

We believe we could regain our sense of humor if we could see the guy trying to wear our coat. Judging from the garment he left for our use, our coat must fit him like a circus tent. When we tried to don the substitute, the cuffs came about halfway between wrists and elbows, and it almost required a button hook to fasten the coat over our sunken chest.

Of course, we're not bragging about the quality of our coat. It was only about 10 years old. But it was warm. It hadn't been cleaned or pressed for more moons than we can remember, but we hadn't worn it too much around Roseburg. An overcoat isn't a necessity down here in the mild Umpqua Valley like it is in the east winds of the Columbia Valley. And, believe you me, we aren't kidding. When we hit Portland it was in the midst of a sleet storm, and the heights were in the grip of a silver thaw which broke trees, power lines and slowed traffic. And yet, in the midst of all that, some unprincipled scoundrel swipes our overcoat. No siree, it ain't funny!

We've solved the hat problem. After losing several good hats, we adopted the principle of never wearing anything but a sloppy and begrimed dome cover, and, as a result, no one wants our hat.

It would seem the same idea would work with overcoats, but it doesn't. Certainly our coat was sloppy, but the exchange left us with a considerably worse garment.

Our good wife, while outwardly sympathetic, we know is secretly well pleased, for she's been urging for the last five years that we buy a new coat and quit appearing in public in the old one. But what the heck? It was a comfortable coat, it was warm. What if it wasn't so much for looks? We wouldn't take any prizes for beauty, either, and even a better looking topcoat wouldn't improve our appearance to any material degree.

If it wasn't for the fact that we must go back to Portland soon, we probably would try to get along without an overcoat. It isn't hard to get by without one here in Douglas County most of the time. But we'd hate to live in Portland without warm clothing. Not that we're knocking Portland. But it goes without saying that the Umpqua Basin has Oregon's mildest climate. We'll even admit it!

But we've managed to get inextricably involved in fish nets. We were called to Portland to attend a meeting of sport anglers with the State Fish Commission to consider conservation measures; made a second trip to participate in a sportsmen's meeting, and now have an invitation for another fish commission hearing.

We believe the State of Oregon will experience within the next few years a great deal of benefit from what appears to be a thorough and scientific fish and wildlife conservation program. We're anxious to have a part in this development, because we believe it to be one of the most important projects for future welfare.

It's even worth the price of a new overcoat.

Clamor Increases For Independence Of Puerto Rico

By LESLIE HIGHLEY

WASHINGTON — An increasing trend in favor of independence is taking place in Puerto Rico as a result of the end of World War II and the clamor for liberation voiced by dependent peoples around the globe.

Puerto Rico was a colony of Spain for some 400 years and has been an island possession of the United States since 1898. It has 2,000,000 people.

The increasing independence sentiment has been reported by colonial experts here as the result of the recent formation of a political party in the Carribbean Island to seek independence on the basis of:

1. Friendly negotiations with the United States.

2. Security for the Puerto Rican people under a liberal social and economic domestic policy when independence is achieved.

Showdown in 1948

This is the first time a political party with a platform based on independence has been organized in the island. Its strength will be tested in the 1948 elections.

Independence parties had been formed previously. They failed when they preached hostility or terrorism against the United States, or when they forgot their pledges after coming into power.

The new Independence Party of Puerto Rico—has been organized to offer evidence to the U. S. Congress and the federal administration that the island wants its freedom.

Congress Avoids Hasty

Party leaders say President Truman called upon Congress to allow Puerto Rico to choose its political future but that they do not expect Congress to authorize this plebiscite.

These leaders do not blame Congress. They feel the problems to be considered are of such magnitude that they prevent a speedy solution.

Since they believe that a plebiscite authorized by Congress would be hard to obtain, Independentistas want to have their own referendum.

The Popular party, in control in Puerto Rico, does not advocate any particular form of government. It is committed not to seek any. The Republican and Socialist minority parties advocate statehood. The Liberal party, also a minority, wants a plebiscite.

One Independentista leader visiting here recently said: "If the people vote us into power, it will mean a majority of the voters are in favor of independence."

Could Embarrass Congress

With this support from the voters, the party could ask Congress to grant Puerto Rico its independence on the ground that the people want it. They give considerable importance to the fact that the party, if voted into power, would have a resident commissioner speaking for independence in the U. S. House of Representatives.

An interesting development in the formation of the new party is that it found itself with a three-vote minority in the Legislative Assembly without ever going to the polls. This three-vote minority is stronger than those of the other minority parties.

This is what happened:

The Popular party controlled 54 of the 58 seats in both Senate and House. It elected several assemblymen strongly in favor of independence, but the executive body of the party decreed that none of its members could belong to any organization supporting independence and to the party at the same time.

The three legislators belonged to the Congress of Puerto Rican Independence, a non-partisan organization ardently in favor of liberation. When the alternatives were put up to them, they resigned from the party, joined the new Independence party but did not resign their seats in the legislature.

Washington officials who deal with Puerto Rican affairs feel that the United States may be embarrassed if the independence movement takes control of the island government.

U. S. Relies On Marin

Meanwhile they are relying on Luis Munoz Marin, Senate president and leader of the Popular party, who has advised the people that the new party will create problems to the United States in its international relations.

He has told the people that the island's political future is the exclusive problem of the United States and Puerto Rico and that it will be up to him and his party to solve the problem when the time comes.

Puerto Rico got its first native governor in 450 years of Spanish and American colonial rule last August. This step, the people were told, was in line with both the Popular party's and the federal administration's policies toward self-government.

Independentistas, however, have conceded no importance to the appointment. They say it does not solve any of the fundamental political, social or economic problems of the island.

Goldsborough Is Fearless Jurist, Match for Lewis

By PETER EDSON

NEA Washington Coresspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—The man now in the center of the spotlight is T. (for Thomas Alan Goldsborough, associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. What he does to or for John L. Lewis during the current contempt trial will make labor history.

In the eight years that Justice Goldsborough has been on the bench in Washington, he has been pretty unpredictable. He's a rugged character of pioneer stock from the Eastern shore of Maryland, and he has plenty of guts. He is a shrewd, smart, small-town courthouse lawyer who served in Congress for 19 years before Roosevelt apointed him to the bench. In the 27 years he has been around Washington, he has found out what goes on in politics and all the facts of life.

Utterly Without Fear

The record of cases he has heard shows he has a fondness for trials in which there is a lot of public interest. He doesn't mind hullabaloo and headlines over his decisions. Lawyers who have argued cases before him differ in their appraisal of his decisions, but they seem to agree that if he thought John L. Lewis guilty, he would just as soon put him in jail as look at him. He is utterly fearless and a match for John L. in color and personality.

He makes quick decisions and sticks to them like grim death. He has had numerous rows with the District Court of Appeals, and he probably holds the record for the number of his decisions reversed by these higher courts. District of Columbia Appeals Court is famous for the number of 'lame duck' appointments made to it, however, so lawyers don't attach too much importance to Justice Goldsborough's frequent upsets.

Calls Witness 'Liar'

In the trial of Gaston Means, who persuaded Evalyn Walsh McLean to finance his private detective work on the Lindbergh kidnaping case, Justice Goldsborough told a witness, "I think you're a damned liar," right before the jury. Court of Appeals gave him a terrible bawling out for that, but his decision was upheld.

In the Joan Manners Langan child custody case, which had Washington in a social uproar during the war, Justice Goldsborough made important law in ruling that his court was not bound by Maryland or California and that the welfare of a child was more important than a previous court decision.

In the Gene Autry inflamable cowboy playsuit case, Justice Goldsborough held that any store which sold these costumes gave an implied warranty as to their safety and was therefore responsible for injury sustained while wearing such apparel.

Justice Goldsborough's great-great-great grandfather was a member of the Continental Congress. It's that kind of revolutionary aristocracy that is his heritage. The family has lived in Maryland for over 200 years.

As a Congressman, Goldsborough was a New Dealer, even though he represented the traditionally conservative, Democratic First District of Maryland, taking in the Eastern shore counties. In 1938 he had his biggest fight when he backed Roosevelt on "the purge" and invited the President to "invade the free State of Maryland and help defeat Senator Millard E. Tydings.

The purge failed, and Goldsborough's fight brought down on him the wrath of conservative Democrats from all over the state. They joined forces with Republicans to defeat him, but when the votes were counted, Goldsborough had won. His constituents liked the way he had represented them, and the way he had obtained a lot of New Deal money for their district.

Goldsborough's reward was appointment to the District Court bench by Roosevelt, when Congress authorized increasing the number of justices to serve in Washington. They really should be called "Judges" for the District Court is on a level with state courts. As one of the 12 judges on the bench, Goldsborough takes his turn at hearing motions, jury trials, civil, criminal or divorce cases. It was mere chance the Lewis case fell to his lot.

Employment of Beaver Trappers Upheld by Court

LA GRANDE, Dec. 2. — (AP) — Six plaintiffs' complaint that the State Game Commission's employment of beaver trappers was a monopolistic control of wild life was stricken in Union County circuit court today.

Judge R. J. Green's decision upheld the game commission's contention that the state of Oregon, not the commission, was the real party in interest. The suit was brought against the commission by Ed Fields and five others.

Green held that hiring beaver trappers, since the latter do not keep the pelts, was not at odds with the fact that wild life "belongs to all the citizens."

"It would appear the plaintiffs' complaint is against the legislature rather than the game commission," Green said.

KRNR DIAL-LOG

Bulldog Drummond walked into the fog . . . into the mist . . . la it Monday night and won't be back. Crime Club will replace him . . . A nice cozy little murder and mystery show, so you won't miss the Captain.

More murder at 8:00 when Richard Davis, Private Detective, takes over. This half-hour is good mystery and not too gory. Commander Scott's Voyage of Discovery is good listening at 8:30, followed by Georgie Jessel with Something for the Family.

Exams for Navy Training Course Dated January 18

High School seniors and graduates throughout the nation will compete for entrance in the new Navy college training program January 18, 1947, Omer J. Monger, principal, announced Wednesday.

Available for young men under 21 years of age, ex-service men included, who will qualify for college next year, completed applications, which along with full information can be obtained at the Roseburg high school, but must be received on or before December 13, 1946, to be considered for the 1947 competition.

The examination is to be held on that date in the Roseburg high school under the supervision of Mr. Monger, with those selected going to either Medford or Corvallis for the final tests.

More than 5,000 young men standing highest in these competitive examinations will be offered a four-year college education at government expense. Those selected may choose either naval reserve officers' training corps or naval aviation program sponsorship of their college education and qualify for commissions as officers in the Navy or Marine Corps upon graduation.

Must Accept Commissions

Candidates must agree to accept commissions as ensigns in the Navy or second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, if qualified upon graduation.

The purpose of this new program is to provide a steady supply of well-educated junior officers for the line and staff corps of the regular Navy and to build up a reserve of trained officers who will be ready to serve their country when notified in a national emergency. NROTC graduates will be given equal rank, equal treatment and equal opportunities with the graduates of the United States Naval Academy.

Naval Aviation College program candidates will not be assigned to colleges but may attend any accredited university or college, or junior college of their choice to which they may be admitted.

The highest navigable lake in the world is Lake Titicaca, on the border between Peru and Bolivia. It is two and a half miles above sea level, 139 miles long and its depth varies from 100 to 1000 feet.

Double Loser

BELMONT, N. Y., Nov. 30.—(AP)—Kenneth Myers of Buffalo, out deer hunting, spotted a buck a short distance away.

He fired twice and the animal fell, wounded. Closing in for the kill, Myers fell into a hole, dropped his gun.

A moment later another hunter appeared, killed the deer and carried it off.

Myers, deerless, suffered a fractured ankle in the fall.
