Human Nerves Rivaled By Calculating Machines

WICHITA, Kas.—(AP)—Calculating machines capable of solving weighty mathematical problems in a fraction of a second have advanced so far that they resemble the human nervous system in their working, says Charles A. Hutchinson, University of Colorado engineering college head.

But Hutchinson said the machines absolutely do not think. They cannot perform judgments, and do not have brains, contrary to the "giant brain" designation given them.

"The huge machines just do the things smaller ones have been doing for years," he said. "But they do them faster and more efficiently. Few universities can afford them, as they sometimes cost more than $250,000."
