Water Supply Seen Abundant

Flood Threat Eases As Snow Pack Melts

Flood-conscious Willamette Valley people breathe easier Monday when the latest water supply forecast noted the snowpack has let down considerably from its alarming stages of two months ago.

Snow surveys made on 29 Oregon snow courses, as of May 1, indicate that 28 per cent of the record high April 1 snow has melted and largely disappeared from the mountain watersheds, according to federal-state cooperative snow survey headquarters.

"Revisions in Oregon's 1952 water supply prospects indicate the entire state should receive 'excellent' to 'abundant' supplies this summer with near record or record-breaking streamflows expected to come from an all-time high of snow cover in many sections.

"Stored water in reservoirs has now come up to 112 per cent average and water has been spilled from 12 out of 24 of the larger reservoirs to provide space for later inflow.

"Total water stored in 24 of the larger Oregon reservoirs is now 112 per cent of the 1941-50 average, 106 per cent of 1951, 113 per cent of 1950, and 87 per cent of capacity," the report continued.

McKay Urges Dam Finances

SALEM — (AP)—Gov. Douglas McKay will fly to Washington, D. C., Tuesday to try to convince Congress to restore the cuts proposed for federal dam construction in the Northwest.

Gov. McKay said private power companies, federal power officials and the northwest governors are united in their campaign to get enough money to finish the eight dams now under construction.

The governor will return Friday night.
