Flea Fishing Now Italian Industry

FERRARA, Italy (AP) — Ever hear of flea fishing? No, not fly fishing. Flea fishing.

Scores of boys and unemployed men are making a living at it these days in the swamps and lakes of the Po River delta here. The fleas sell by the pint, and wind up in cellophane packages on the world market.

The odd industry goes back over a century. An old Ferrara sea captain sailed home from the China Seas to retire. He brought back a few buckets filled with goldfish and poured them out into a little lake near here.

Apparently the same buckets contained Chinese water fleas. They bred by the millions, and almost annual Po delta floods spread them throughout the swamplands.

The flea fishing industry devlthe idea the fleas were a health oped only recently. Someone got food for canaries and fancy tropical fish.

Boys skim them from the water with fine-mesh cloth nets and sell them by the pint. Buyers say at the right season, a hard working boy can bring in half a dozen pints a day.

Property Taxes In Douglas High In Percent Rise

Total taxes on property in Douglas County during the 1953-54 year have increased to the third highest percentage rate in the state, according to a comprehensive report in the Oregon Voter.

The total direct taxes levied by the county, including millage levies and levies per acre per front foot, etc., reached $5,017,864. This is an increase of 21.8 percent over the 195253 year, when aggregate total levies were $4,131,934.

On a percentage increase basis, this was exceeded only by Lake County (25.9 percent) and Coos County (23 percent). The total tax figure was below only four other counties in the state—Multnomah, Marion, Lane and Clackamas.

Ad valorem levies on property were also rated third among the counties in the state in increase. These include direct levies, computed at millage rates levied on assessed valuation. They do not include per acre or per front foot levies.

Total ad valorem levies added up to $5,017,864, as compared to the 195253 figure of $4,131,934. This is an increase of 21.3 percent. Lake, with 211 percent and Coos with 22.9 percent, showed the only greater increases. The total again rated only behind the aforementioned four counties.

County and school district taxes levied in Douglas county on property for public schools have jumped more than 20 percent this fiscal year. This year, the total for the county is $4,075,538, an increase of 23.7 percent over last year's figure of $3,295,087. Two other counties again topped this increase, Gilliam County was high cent increase, and Coos was a est in the state with 25.6 per close second with 28.1 percent.

Only three counties had a higher total levy this year. They are Multnomah Lane and Clackamas.
