Carriers Attacked By Big Four Head

Chicago, Sept. 21. — Railroad executives were charged with duplicity in their dealings with shopmen by Warren S. Stone, president of the brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in an affidavit read at the Daugherty injunction hearing.

Stone declared that while openly the railroads favored the open shop secretly they were working for the closed shop.

The Union Pacific employes association, which was one of the road unions developing from the strike was cited as an instance of the closed shop.

The affidavits declared that if a man resigned from the Union Pacific he was automatically discharged from the organization and that dues were deducted from the pay envelopes.

The affidavit was read by Donald A. Richberg, attorney for the shopmen.

MYSTERY OF GHOST HOUSE PENETRATED

choir leader left her husband without announcing their respective destinations.

"I ran to the window and jerked back the curtain," said Mrs. Jones.

"I saw two automobiles dashing past at terrific speed. They were headed toward New Brunswick."

Other persons in the neighborhood stated they also heard the screams of a woman and the shots.

Every person in New Brunswick knew of the tragic end of the Rev. Hall and Mrs. Mills but one—the aged mother of the minister.

The mother lives in a boarding house and was taken for rides frequently by the minister. Although she attended her son's funeral, friends told her he died a natural death.

Mrs. Hall, the pastor's brokenhearted wife, denied herself to interviewers today.

"I still believe in my husband," members of the household quoted her as saying. "The sordid stories of scandal that they tell of Edward are all lies—I know they are."

Mills, husband of the choir leader and janitor of the aristocratic church, sat on the wobbly steps of the unpainted frame house where he occupies the second floor and reaffirmed his faith in his dead wife.

"I'm sure of her innocence," he said repeatedly.

"If it has been any other man but my pastor, I might not be so certain.

"But he was a good man—Elinor was a good girl."
