State May Get Cooler Weather Late This Week

PORTLAND (AP) — The Weather Bureau said Monday that Oregon can look for a little cooler weather generally, with the northern part of the state in line for clouds and perhaps some showers late in the week.

This will be a fringe effect of the flow of Pacific disturbances across southern Canada.

The bureau's discussion of the weather situation said that a weakened high pressure area would "permit the Pacific disturbances that are always present along the polar weather front, to steer courses farther to the southward."

While near the end of the week northwestern Oregon may get showers from a storm centered off Vancouver Island, surges of cooler air aloft may bring thunderstorms to southeastern Oregon and the higher mountain areas elsewhere in the state.

ZOO BUILDING

PORTLAND (AP) — The City Council here has awarded a $557,777 contract for construction of a building to house apes and monkeys at Portland's new zoo.

Columbia River Low, Power Reduction Due

SEATTLE (AP) — An early cutback of interruptible power to aluminum plants and other large industries in the Pacific Northwest was predicted Monday by Bonneville Power Administration officials.

They said the Columbia River is at a record low stage for mid-August. The streamflow at Grand Coulee Dam last week was 86,000 cubic feet a second, or 13,000 second feet lower than the previous low recorded in the 1936-37 water year.

Seaton Asks For Study On Pleasant Valley Dam

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of the Interior Seaton disclosed here that he has asked the Senate and House Appropriations Committees for $196,000 for a feasibility study of a proposed high federal dam at Pleasant Valley on the Snake River.

The money would be transferred from other investigations under way in Oregon and Idaho.

The Interior Department started a study of the Pleasant Valley site last spring but cancelled it when the House committee refused to approve a fund transfer to carry out the investigation.

A high dam at Pleasant Valley would flood out the site of a lower Pleasant Valley dam proposed by the Pacific Northwest Power Co. and a low dam at Hells Canyon proposed by the Idaho Power Co.
