Georgia-Pacific's Toledo Mill Closes

TOLEDO, Ore. (AP) — The old Georgia-Pacific band saw mill, once the largest in the world, was down permanently Monday and many of its workers were looking for jobs most of the men though, were already located in other mills.

The last log went through the mill Friday, ending more than 40 years of operation, first under the Spruce Production Division of the Army, which built it in World War I, then under C. D. Johnson Lumber Co. Georgia-Pacific bought the mill in 1952.

Plans for closure were announced three months ago. In the time since, many of the 200 workers were transferred to other Georgia-Pacific operations in Toledo or elsewhere. Weyerhaeuser Co., also employed a number, taking nine from the green chain for its Snoqualmie, Wash., plant.

The state employment office said today no big rush of work-seekers was expected. The number of jobless in the area is less than a year ago, it reported.
