Leaning Tower Problems Studied

Rome—(AP)—Two suggestions to prevent the leaning tower of Pisa from leaning too far are being studied by Italian Government authorities.

The first plan, submitted by Prof. Giulio Penta, calls for reinforcement of the tower's base by drilling a series of holes and filling them with cement. This, he says, would reduce the load of the structure on the sinking ground of its foundation.

Prof. Armando Donato suggested the more radical remedy of building a cement platform around the foot of the structure and letting the tower rest on a series of horizontal cement cross-pieces anchored to the platform.

The suggestions were submitted after newspaper predictions that the tower, one of Italy's biggest tourist attractions, would collapse by the end of this century if its present rate of slant was not checked.

But the history of the tower, completed in 1350 by architect Tommaso Pisano, is filled with alternate periods of concern and optimism. First doubts were voiced in 1550. Since 1907 four government commissions have studied the problem — with no effect.

Various "remedies," including draining off subterranean waters and stuffing the subsoil with cement, have all failed.

The angle of the tower's lean increases by seven-tenths of a millimeter every year.

FISHING NOTE

Greenfield, N.H.—(AP)— Seated in wheelchairs or standing with the aid of crutches, 40 crippled youngsters from the Crotched Mountain Rehabilitation center caught 270 speckled trout in two hours.

Washable silk becomes weak in water, so it should not be rubbed or twisted. Squeeze from the suds and rinse water.
