Egyptian Farmer Works All Day For Price of Carton of Cigarets

By FRED SPARKS
NEA Staff Correspondent

CAIRO (NEA)—Imagine working all week for the price of a carton of cigarettes!

That's the payoff for millions in the Arab Middle East, many of them citizens of this newest of the world's republics. Their razor-thin slice of the world's prosperity pie is the basic reason why any political big mouth who'll promise three squares can send a mob on a house burning, throat-cutting spree.

As you read about U.S. concern for the Suez Canal, the desert oil fields and Middle East Defense, you should know something of the area's citizens, for people are politics.

To meet an average Egyptian I motored 25 miles from Cairo along the River Nile. For 6000 years before the first electric blanket this river has watered the only substantial Egyptian soil. (From the air the Nile Valley looks like a green ribbon of toothpaste on an endless sand-white carpet.)

Near the river we stop by the half-acre farm of Abdullah Iffifi, one of 14 million Egyptian farmers who scratch for the skinniest life. We see a water buffalo cow with a blindfold over her eyes walking in an endless circle threshing grain with an ancient wooden wheel contraption.

Iffifi's smallest son, naked as a picked chicken, straddles the beast, the family's most precious property. I'm told the animal is blacked out because if she sees she's getting no place after days of endless plodding she'll go stir crazy.

Irrigation ditches fork from the Nile like veins; one cuts through Iffifi's lot. Two of his daughters (who'll never use lipstick) pump ditch water for the wheat field using two tightly woven baskets fixed on a pole. It's a 14-hour-daily drudge that would exhaust Charles Atlas.

Iffifi's one room house, large as 15 sedans tightly parked, is made of dried Nile mud with a doorless break for air and entrance. Besides the family there are hundreds of flies buzzing collectively like a B-29 and sticking to your face until slapped dead.

Some personal odds and ends are pitched in a corner but there's not a stick of furniture. The family's clothing consists of a few sheets of wraparound white cloth, and some peppermint striped pajama outfits.

The market possibilities of a revived Middle East shake the trader. If each shoeless citizen could buy one pair all our shoe factories would work overtime and give Christmas bonuses.

The Iffifis sleep on pressed corn stalks and Mom cooks on a kerosene lamp every other day, fuel being that costly for their thin wallet.

The menu lists unleavened bread, raw onions and beans. Meat is a vaguely recalled dream. The water buffalo contributes milk and cheese. The dreary diet plus the fly-borne germs, is why no Iffifi expects to celebrate a 50th birthday.

Introduce Iffifi to an average American home and he'd be as confused as his water buffalo. He couldn't flip the light switch or open the refrigerator and the mad movements on the TV screen would give him the shakes.

But he is used to sights that would give you the shakes—his own primitive existence, the everyday sight of other fellahs like himself, harnessed to sailing ships they pull along the desert canals.

Every few weeks he goes to town for the luxury of a thimble of Turkish coffee. There he hears cafe chatterboxes comment on Mohamed Naguib, Egypt's strong man, whose promises of plenty are blocked by the simple truth of too many people for too little good earth.

Unable to read a paper, Iffifi can't tell you what the U.S. is, where or why.

He has only one surplus, hate. He hates foreigners, blindly blaming them for all ills. He particularly hates the neat, strapping British tommies who speed by en route to the Canal Zone.

Given the word from the minaret, given arms, he and his sons would pitch violently into a holy war for misty reward. If they are killed? "As Allah wills it."

TO SCRATCH OUT a razor-thin slice of the world's prosperity, these Egyptian citizens harness themselves to a sailing vessel and tow it through a canal carved out of the desert.

Dead Girl Raised

By Geo. N. Taylor

An only child, the 12-year-old daughter of Jairus was dead. The mourners were shrieking and carrying on as was their way. Then Jesus is brought in by Jairus, the girl's father, and He tells them that she is not dead but sleeping. At that the hired mourners laugh Him to scorn. Jesus, knowing that she was dead, put them all out but the father and mother and four disciples. Then taking the girl by the hand, He said — Maid Arise. And her spirit came again and He commanded to give her bread. — Luke 8th.

Geo. N. Taylor

And on a day, your spirit will depart and leave you dead. But if you have lived with Christ in your heart as being your Lord and Saviour, you will be raised up to glory Resurrection Day. If not, there awaits you the Second Death and eternal woe. — Revelation 20:04. This space sponsored by a Portland, Ore., Lumberman and Wife.

Unused Leave Bill To Ike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed and sent to President Eisenhower Saturday a bill prohibiting top federal officials from drawing cash payments in lieu of unused leave.

Passage was by roll-call vote of 269 to 65.

The measure is an outgrowth of disclosures that former Truman administration officials, including most cabinet members, drew payments running up to several thousand dollars when they left office.

It is a compromise between different bills passed by the Senate and the House.

It also liberalizes leave requirements for most of the 2½ million federal employes below the top tanks. Under current laws, employes must use all their leave earned in one year within six months after the year ends. Thus they cannot pile up large amounts of accumulated leave.

126 DESCENDENTS

TACOMA (AP) — Mrs. Minnie May Hamblin, 78, of Tacoma, who died Friday, left 126 direct descendents.

They include seven sons, six daughters, 86 grandchildren, 23 great-grandchildren and four great-great-grandchildren.
