Bones May Be Put Together Without Aid Of Surgery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors are working on the possibility of repairing fractured human bones by gluing them together without surgery. So far it has been tried only on animals, but with promising results.

Dr. Milton S. Cobey said the method involves injecting a plastic material at the site of the fracture. A hypodermic needle is used, in much the same fashion as doctors inject certain medicines and vaccines.

This idea differs from other previous concepts for gluing fractured bone ends together. The older concepts involve surgical operations to lay open the site of the fracture — after which a plastic glue-like material is inserted to help promote healing.

Dr. Cobey, professor of orthopedic surgery at Georgetown's School of Medicine told about the research in a report prepared for an American Fracture Assn. meeting in New Orleans. The paper was distributed here by the university.

"In the history of medicine to date," he said, "no glue or plastic of any kind has been invented that can be injected into a human fracture site to hold bones together. However, it has been done by us entirely in the research field — in laboratory animals. But it is still not applicable to the human at this time."

Dr. Cobey said a plastic has been developed that appears to be satisfactory when employed in tests on rats and rabbits.

"The plastic so far has caused no material irritation and caused no evidence of cancer," he added. "But, on the other hand, it has not been in use long enough for us to make a final statement."

HAS A BORING JOB

ALLENHURST, N. J. (AP)—Art Burns has been enjoying his boring job for the past 23 years. His job is to bore holes in utility poles to see how long they are going to last. "Of course I'm on the lookout for termites," he says, "but the biggest mess around my poles is made by woodpeckers."

Beethoven wrote the Concerto in D Major for Violin in 1806 for the violinist Franz Clement.
