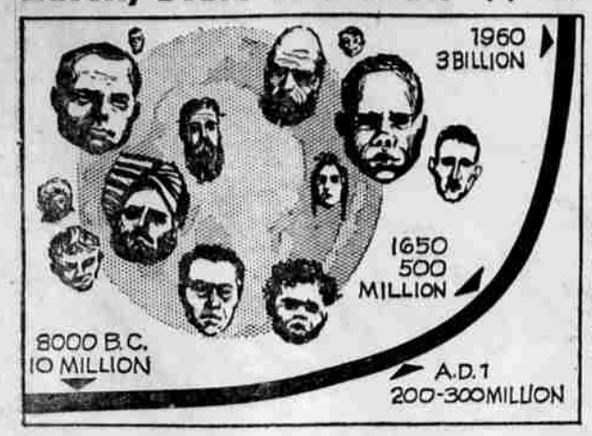
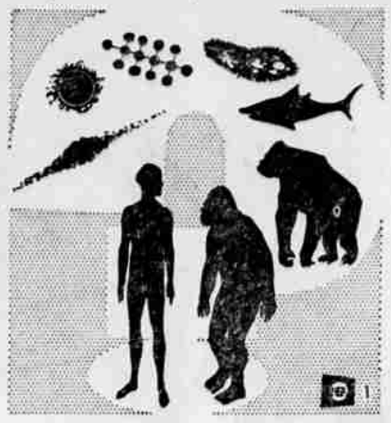
Earth, Stars and Man (1) Search for Man

by Don Oakley and John Lane





The world in A.D. 1960 teems with life. The species that calls itself man is the dominant and fastest increasing of its forms. Few parts of the globe have not been exploited by men, so varied in their types, cultures and languages.

Man is apparently the only really self-conscious animal, the only one who thinks about death and destiny. Men know their own personal extinction is certain, and wonder why. The race expands and progresses with each new generation, yet men more and more fear the extinction of mankind as a whole — self-inflicted in nuclear war.

Man considers himself the highest form of life and calls himself Homo sapiens — "wise man." But he has more questions than answers about himself. He wonders if he is unique in the universe, if perhaps "life" itself appears only on this earth.

Some men look to the past, to the origins of the world and of living things, for an answer. At the same time, others look beyond the earth.

In April, 1960, at the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank, W. Va., astronomers began an experiment (Project Ozma) that would have been ridiculed only a few years ago. They focused their latest tool, the radio-telescope, at two Sol-type stars some 60 million million miles from earth.

They hoped — but did not expect — to pick up radio messages from the vicinity of those stars.

That first attempt was unsuccessful. But men will try again. And should they ever contact other intelligent life, they might well ask: "Do you know how you came to be?" For man has ever been fascinated by the riddle of his origin, and his future, and his apparent aloneness in the unthinkably large universe.

This is the story of a search —of apes and amoebae, of suns and galaxies. It is a story whose beginning and end appear to meet somewhere among the stars.

Navy Band Thrills KF Audience

By RUTH KING

Appreciative audiences at two concerts by the United States Navy Band here Monday thrilled to the music of the famous "masters of music" under the baton of Commander Charles Brendler, USN, conductor. Making its second appearance here the band was brought to Klamath Falls by the music department of Klamath Union High School as a benefit for the KUHS Band, invited to the East-West game again this year.

While the evening attendance was below expectations, music lovers who heard the splendid rendition of the numbers that ran the gamut from the opening of Fanfare of Herald Trumpets to the lilting finale of the Irish Suite, by Leroy Anderson, were generous with applause.

The evening listeners loved the soloist performance of Lawrence Wiehe, in his own trombone arrangement of that ever enchanting "All Those Endearing Young Charms," Simone Mantia; a duet by Wiehe and Cornetist Gordon Finlay, "Tico-Tico"; Carlton Beyer, whose fine harmonica solo to band accompaniment of "Parisienne Fantasy," themes of Offenbach, brought repeat calls for encores; Frank Scimonelli, master of the English post horn in "Tally Ho!" by Barsotti, and Tenor Ben Mitchel Morris who sang the "Addio A La Madre," from Cavalleria Rusticana, Mascagni, in excellent voice.

More than 3,000 school children and adults from Klamath Falls, and county schools, Alturas, Newell, Tulelake, McCloud, Fort Jones, Lakeview, Bieber, Mount Shasta and Fall River, crammed Pelican Court for the afternoon concert. Many stayed for the evening performance.

The band, which travels in two large chartered buses, has a tight booking scheduled with appearances every day. This year's itinerary which included all the Northwest states, California and Utah and Nevada, began September 28 at Salt Lake City and will conclude November 4 at Ogden. A truck carries instruments. From Klamath Falls the band traveled to Chico Tuesday morning for concerts there.

Arrangements for the 1960 engagement were made by LaMar Jensen, band director.

Adlai Debuts As Actor

NEW YORK (AP) — Adlai Stevenson, whose enemies have said he should have been an entertainer rather than a politician, played his first performance on a Broadway stage Monday night.

It must have been one of the toughest jobs of his career.

For one thing, he played the leading role, with Henry Fonda, Lauren Bacall, Tom Bosley, Anne Bancroft, Jason Robards Jr., Tallulah Bankhead, Myrna Loy and Orson Bean among the supporting players.

For another, the twice-defeated presidential candidate had to act like Adlai Stevenson on the stage of the Morosco Theater a couple of hours before Melvyn Douglas went on for the night performance of "The Best Man"—a role many observers consider a Broadway version of Adlai Stevenson.

And finally, Stevenson the political wit had to follow a performance by Mort Sahl, the night club wit whose wittiness is sometimes more political than Stevenson's.

The occasion was a Democratic party rally for show business voters, with Douglas, Sahl and Stevenson assisted by former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman—going all-out for Sen. John F. Kennedy.

The show was advertised by quaint, old-fashioned theater bills announcing "Adlai on Broadway."

It was emceed by Douglas, who introduced all the stars on stage, then brought on Sahl, "the man who calls himself the next president of the United States."

Stevenson said: "I'm going to talk about the Republicans and it's not a very demanding subject. You don't have much of a problem keeping up with them as they stay in the same place. As you all know from the circus parades, the elephant proceeds best by grasping the tail of its predecessor."

Of Vice President Richard M. Nixon, he said: "I don't think anyone has shown so many different faces to the American people since the death of the late, lamented Lon Chaney."
