The Fourth Series

(Written by Dr. M. P. Mendelsohn for the benefit of the public)

Not only does the human eye deserve to be called the most wonderful part of the human body "made in the image of God", but science regards it as the crowning work of the Creator and during those six primal days when He brought a marvelous order out of choas and finished the scheme of the universe by making man. The most wonderful things in the world are the most intricate and delicate.

This is true of the eye. It fears danger more than any other part of the body.

The approach of a speck or dirt is guarded against by the quick, involuntary closing of the lids.

When, by chance, a foreign particle slips through before the little gates can be closed, and lodges upon the sensitive lids or the surface of the eye itself, what instantaneous warning is given and how suddenly do we know that there is a condition which calls for immediate relief; or means unrelenting pain, until the stranger has been dislodged!

The eye is as sentimental as it is delicate.

It is the window of the soul, and in it the moods and passions are clear ly written.

The poets have sung about the eye, the novelists have made it the center of love, hate, joy, grief and desire. Its matchless mechanism furnishes a study that requires untold years to master. The eye is a thing to which only superlatives apply.

It is the most wonderful, the most delicate, the most expressive part of the human body, and in addition is the most susceptible to injury and the most difficult to heal after the injury has come. It is, therefore, self evident that the eye requires the most careful treatment that can be devised, and that treatment, on account of the delicacy of the organ itself, should be as tender and as careful and as near free from pain as can be accomplished through application of medical skill.

To torture the eye is like torturing the soul.

To abuse the eye is to abuse God Himself, who sees the world in and through these little mans of sight.

To neglect the eye when in need of skilful attention is not short of criminal, and to permit improper treatment, when the eye is weak or injured is a most serious wrong.

"Can be depended upon" is an expression we all like to hear, and when it is used in connection with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy it means that it never fails to cure diarrhoea, dysentery or bowel complaints. It is pleasant to take and equally valuable for children and adults.
