Washington Parade

By Ray Johnson and Walter Pierce

WASHINGTON— Close political observers are of the opinion that the Eden-Roosevelt conversation may determine the success of the entire post-war pattern as laid down by the Atlantic Charter. The first result of these talks is expected to pave the way for a real rapprochment between Russia, Great Britain and the United States. There is no need to hide the fact that while these three great powers are cooperating in their efforts to win the war, there is not, however, the complete unity between all the United Nations at present that is needed to reach a genuine understanding on post-war problems.

Also encouraging is the initiative taken by the senate with regard to the post-war problems of the United Nations. Unlike the attitude taken by the senate toward Woodrow Wilson 25 years ago the senate is now urging President Roosevelt to take the lead in organizing the United Nations. These moves are non-political and were initiated by the leaders of both parties.

Such straightforward moves by the senate are bound to inspire public confidence in its members and give hope to the weaker nations of the world that American leadership will stand by the Atlantic Charter.

From Poland: On February 3, 1943, the Nazi authorities in the general government of Poland issued an appeal inviting the Polish population to register on the German "Volksliste" (German National List) before March 15.

This appeal states that German "scientific research" has established that the population of Central Poland is of German descent, Polonized in the course of centuries by adopting Polish customs, the Polish language and Polish names. Hitler himself, the appeal promises, will henceforth take the population of the general government under his personal protection and grant them "some political freedom." Nothing is said of the precise nature of this "freedom."

In order to provide the Austrian town of Linz, where Hitler went to school, with an art collection, the Germans have looted a number of old masters from the Netherlands. Acting upon Hitler's instructions to obtain desirable works for the Linz Gallery, Hans Posse, the former director of the Dresden Gallery, rounded up some twelve hundred paintings, says Goebbel's publication Das Reich. The German works, except for one by young Holbein, are mostly unimportant; but works by Cranach, VanDyck, Rubens, Rembrant and Vermeer which originated in the "racially related Netherlands, give the gallery its character," Das Reich reported. Among the gallery's acquisitions are Rembrandt's "Titus," Lucas Cranach the Elder's "Venus and Armour," and Vermeer's "The Painter in His Studio."

Walter Pierce Reports: Despite the Nazi policy of discouraging Christianity, membership in the Calvanist churches of the Netherlands increased in 1942 by 11,000 to a total of 684,505. The Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant of February 1 said that crowded services had made it necessary for church councils to inaugurate additional services . . . In the composing room of a certain large metropolitan newspaper a proof reader found a slug marked "Herbie" over a story about ex-President Hoover. "Change that slug immediately" came the order from above. "It's irrelevant." The first time in the memory of the older newspapermen that a "slug" has been edited. . . . . A Dutchman who escaped to England at the end of January related the following story which is circulating throughout Washington. A man, fed up with conditions, tried to commit suicide. First he tried to hang himself, but the "ersatz" rope broke under his weight. Next he threw himself into a canal, but his "ersatz" suit, made of wood, kept him afloat. In disgust he bought some poison from a drug store, but that was "ersatz" too, and had no effect. Finally he gave up the idea of suicide and started to live on his ration coupons. As a result he died within a month.

Christensen on Tour

W. C. Christensen, Hillsboro banker and county chairman of the Victory fund committee as well as a member of he state Victory fund committee, joined in a speaking tour Monday with A. L. Powers, president of the Oregon State Bankers' association, and D. L. Davis, manager of the Portland branch of the federal reserve bank. They will represent the war finance committee, the joint group that for the month of April embodies the war savings staff and the victory fund committee under the new title. Their itinerary included White Salmon, Wash., The Dalles, Bend, Burns, Ontario, Baker, LaGrande, Pendleton and Walla Walla, ending up Friday night. Other representatives are booked to speak at other meetings throughout the state.

Every establishment in the state employing 25 or more persons will be asked to join in a "purchase equipment" campaign during April. The concern will be asked to select some piece of army or navy equipment such as a bomber, fighter, anti-aircraft gun—in fact anything from a battleship down— and purchase enough bonds inside the organization to pay for it. Special cooperation by the army and navy is providing a plaque on the larger pieces of equipment that credit the source to the group providing the funds.

During the Second War Loan the treasury is offering investments to fit every pocketbook. It is not only a duty but a privilege for every American on the home front to sacrifice to cut down living necessities —in order to purchase his share of these government securities for his own security. The men in our fighting forces have not hesitated to sacrifice to the ultimate. They give their lives—you lend your money!

Price Ceiling Put On Meat by OPA

ming, and no retail cuts of these meats other than those described in the new maximum price regulation No. 355 (retail ceiling prices for beef, veal, lamb and mutton cuts) may be sold by storekeepers.

OPA also announced additional steps to assure the housewife buying "ground round" that she is getting exactly what she pays for. Hereafter, no butcher may sell any meat pre-ground prior to sale except ground beef (hamburger), ground veal and ground lamb. If a customer buys any other cut of meat and wants it ground, the retailer may grind it at the time of purchase—but may not charge for the grinding.

As another protective measure to consumers, butchers may now sell as cube steaks only those that are cubed at the time of purchase. If a customer buys a cut of meat and wants it cubed, the storekeeper may cube it—but cannot charge extra for the service.

Beginning April 15, every storekeeper must keep available for inspection the official OPA price list for retail cuts of beef, veal, lamb and mutton, if he has any of these meats for sale. In case of overcharge, the consumer may sue for a minimum of $50 and costs.

Retailers can give "change" in 1-point red stamps to customers who do not have the exact amount of valid red stamps on hand when buying meats, cheese, butter, and other items under the "red stamp" ration program, the district OPA explained again today in answer to questions still coming in to rationing officials It was pointed out that this is a departure from the processed foods program which requires the housewife to pay over the exact number of points in blue stamps for canned goods and does not allow the making of change.

The red stamps bearing the letter A are good now and on April 4 red stamps with the letter B became effective for the purchase of meats, cheese, butter, edible fats and oils, and canned fish. The customer must remove the red stamps from her book in the presence of the store clerk, housewives were reminded.

Mother Love Wins

A City Hospital. Here a black-eyed woman from sunny Italy hovers over a small son whose swarthy face stands out against the white bed. It was a tonsil case and the woman had left the boy that morning and then further on, had checked two smaller ones at the day nursery while she went on to the day's work. Now she has the tots again and must hurry home to where a pair of school-age are waiting. Then comes the cooking, washing, sweeping and mending. The husband had deserted and yet she keeps the brood together. So we have it; mother love, undying, never failing and is as old as the race itself.

Which is strongest, love or duty? Which in Christian work? We asked the group in the Community Bible Church and with most of them love won. It was the mother of four who said that the thing done out of duty is most fruitful of results when love travels along. The Apostle must have had this in mind when he wrote—"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a clanging cymbal."

This old world craves a lot of love; these times more than ever. Even the grown-ups join in at—"Jesus loves me this I know." And in—"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want," we have the best loved Psalm. It breathes the Shepherd's tender care. And who can name the host of souls brought through to God by John 3:16?—"For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son." Yes, God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

But what for the restless, fruitless, hungry, world-loving children of God? They have salvation in that they have received Christ as their only Saviour. But any passion for Him they do not feel.

Let all such take up the Christian task nearest to hand. Do it from sher duty, if from sheer duty it must be. Keep on with it and cry to God for Power From On High. He will see you through and somewhere along the way, you will come into the fragrance of Christ's eternal love. After that you will choose stripes, imprisonment; yes, death itself rather than go back to the old loveless days.

"For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." The Apostle Paul.
