THE CATTLE INDUSTRY OF THE PLAINS.

It seems that shares in cattle growing companies are becoming the fashionable investments in New York as well as abroad. We recently gave some facts about the investment of British capital in building up live stock enterprises to Colorado, Wyoming and adjacent Territories, and how well the share holders were pleased with their investments. In New York, on Monday evening, a group of New York cattle breeders had a banquet and a discussion afterward. James A. Burden presided, and introduced as first speaker Thomas Sturgis. To show the enormously rapid growth of the stock business in the West, he cited the Wyoming Stock Growing Association, of which he was himself a member. Ten years ago it was organized with 10 members, representing 25,000 head of cattle worth $500,000. To day it has a membership of 100, representing 1,000,000 head of cattle, and is worth $30,000,000. Last year they sent to market 200,000 head of cattle, which netted to the owners about $1,000,000. The four great difficulties they had to contend with were the Indians, the white outlaws and the thieves of the border, contagious diseases and the climate. The first three had been practically reduced to nothing by the association. They had their own police, watching every outlet by which cattle could be smuggled out of the country, and they had organized a quarantine system which had effectually prevented the introduction of disease.

Mr. Dater said he believed the most profitable industry in the West would be the raising of horses and mules. Draught horses and mules he claimed could be raised for not exceeding $20 per head, and this would show even a greater profit than cattle raising.

General Grant gave some interesting reminiscences of the stock business in Texas, when, in 1845, he first visited that country, and still later, when he had gone through our cattle raising territories. He had believed by this time that section of the country would be in in the same state as the South American large ranch owners, raising cattle for the mere sake of getting the hides and tallow, but the wonderful development of our population and our prosperity had made this expectation fail of its fulfillment.

GOOSE WHEAT IN OREGON.—In this State we have a grade of wheat that is known as goose wheat. It is so called because the wheat grown in the State all came from two or three grains taken from the crop of a wild goose. The wheat has a very hard, coarse shell, and makes a pecular grade of flour. No wheat like it is known in this country. The people of Oregon have wondered from whence it came. This wonder is explained. From samples of foreign wheat at the Agricultural Department the exact duplicate of the goose wheat of Oregon has been found. This wheat comes from a small province in Spain, the only place where it has been grown. From that, one may safely surmise that the will goose flies around the world in pretty fast time. If we remember it aright, it was a farmer who lived in Marion county, about opposite where Wheatland now is, and the goose was killed in the winter of 1850.—"Journal of Commerce."

BEHIND THE DOOR WITH BROTHER BROWN.—The following story is related by a clergyman as an actual experience, and as an example of things humorous which sometimes crop out prominently during the serious times of revival meetings. Mr. Brown arose and told his experience. He had been a poor miserable sinner; had fallen from grace again and again, had often yielded to his besetting sins, and he humbly felt that he was unworthy to sit with his brethren and sisters, that his proper place was behind the door. Later in the evening a sister arose. She, too, had been weak, and too often stumbled by the wayside; her faith had wavered, "and in fact," continued the penitent sister, with tears in her eyes, "I feel as though my proper place was with with Brother Brown behind the door."

The Arizona Apaches are on the war path as a Tombstone dispatch of March 24th says: "Two bodies supposed to be those of S. E. James, of the Contention mine, and C. M. Thorndyke, son of Superintendent Thorndyke, who had such a narrow escape on Tuesday morning. News reached here this afternoon of the killing of a Mr. Dibble. It is reported that Lincoln Nash has been killed at Antelope Springs, 14 miles from town, by Indians.

The buzz of the saw is heard in 25,708 mills in this fair land of ours, and $146,155,385 worth of logs and mill supplies is used up every year, the product therefrom being valued at $233,367,729.
