Ribbon Cookies.

Mix fire, after your favorite recipe, a batch of white cookies flavored with lemon. In another dish mix a batch of chocolate cookies, flavoring with vanilla. Roll out chocolate cookies quite thin, then roll out white ones, same as chocolate. Place one on top of the other and roll as jelly roll. Take a sharp knife and cut slices from the roll, turn them over and lay them in baking pan. When cooked they are a delight to the eye as well as the palate.

Make molasses cookies, cutting them in strips with sharp knife, about the length and width of lady fingers. When baked and while warm spread with good jelly and press two together, making a dainty cookie sandwich.

The Red Shawl.

There lives in Atchison a woman who has been happily married 40 years and who has raised five children. Recently she was out walking when she caught sight of a peculiarly bright red shawl. The men will sniff at what happened next: The woman felt a twinge at her heart; the shawl had reminded her of a girl who had stolen her first lover. The girl always wore red of that shade. Then the old woman went home, took out her false teeth that she might not swallow them in her grief, and gave herself up to sad memories. We will bet no woman will sniff. An incident like this appeals to the women.—Atchison Globe.

PONDS SUPPLIED BY DEW

Mists From the Sea Aid in Keeping Hilltop Reservoirs Filled With Water.

The question why Jack and Jill went "up" the hill, instead of down, to fetch the famous pail of water has been solved by the latest dictionaries, in which may be found the word "dew pond." It was to one of these, which are always built upon high ground, that the two were bound, says the Scientific American, adding that probably it was located on the English downs. Continuing, the writer says:

"The hydrology of the down country is topsy-turvy, for a down is an unland, and the downs afford a bountiful supply of water even when the vales are parched. Hence the singular spectacle of cattle being driven to the hilltops and carts sent uphill to procure water.

"What is a dew pond? The word is only to be found in the two newest dictionaries—the New International and the Century Supplement, both published this year—though it has been used locally for a hundred years, perhaps much longer.

"Dew ponds date back to a prehistoric era. They receive water directly from the air—whether chiefly in the form of rain, mist or otherwise is a question still unsettled, impervious bottoms enabling them to retain all the water they gather. The bottom commonly consists of chalk or clay, over which is strewn a layer of rubble to prevent perforation by the hoofs of animals. A layer of straw is often added. The ponds measure 30 to 70 feet across, and the depth does not exceed three or four feet.

"The theory that these ponds are fed by dew—by the condensation of the invisible moisture of the air—is supported by Edward A. Martin, who has been making extensive observations in Sussex, and who believes that he has found an important source of the water supply in the frequent mists from the sea. From the Geographical Journal of August, 1900, we quote the following:

"'Everyone acquainted with the Sussex downs must be familiar with the sea fogs which sweep inland from the south. One's clothing quickly becomes covered with a deposit of dew-like beads. . . . On some of the downs in West Sussex the highest parts are chosen for pond construction, as being more exposed to the moisture-laden winds. Dew would not be deposited if the air were in rapid motion, but fog brought in from the esa would remain in spite of the wind, provided the temperature were sufficiently low.'

"So the name 'dew pond' is a misnomer; but as Dr. Hugh Robert Mill has recently remarked, it would be a pity if this picturesque word should vanish from the language."

Ohio Man's Eyes Opened.

A man from Ohio who was recently in Seattle, Wash., having heard that the salmon run was on and that scowloads were being taken to the canneries every hour, called a waiter in a local hotel to him and said:

"Sam, go out and buy me the biggest and finest red salmon you can get, have it baked and served to me at dinner. Here is five dollars; keep the change."

When the meal was served that night the Ohio man sat down before a baked fish that stretched the whole length of a four-foot platter. He was amazed, and asked for an explanation. He was more suprised and better informed about the salmon family when the waiter said that he might have bought a 45-pound salmon instead of just a 40-pound fish had he been just a few minutes sooner. He also informed the Ohioan that there was no change to be returned for the fish had cost $4.90, and the waiter's carfare was ten cents, so he received nothing for the labor of carrying the big fish to the hotel.

To Provide for Convicts' Families.

An act to provide relief for the wives and children and other relatives who may be dependent upon prisoners committed to the state prison will be brought before the legislature at its next session, according to F. S. Weis, secretary of the Louisiana state board of charities and corrections.

Since the publication of an article "Is the Right Party Punished?" many inquiries have been received by Mr. Weis as to the number of destitute families in the city, and the number throughout the state, and it appears that there are many charitable persons interested in the passage of this act. It is said to be a simple matter of justice, not of charity; and every effort will be made to prevent the measure from being shelved at the next session.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.
