PLAYING WITH DRUGS.

The Danger of Administering Medicines Without Medical Advice.

There are really few remedies that it is safe to administer without skilled advice, says Harper's Bazar, and those are the simplest, and might all be included in a list comprising only hot water, castor oil and a very little tincture of rhubarb. When a child has been indulging in illicit food, swallowing cherry-stones, or eating unripe raspberries whose hard seeds lodge in the little sack that seems to be in the bowels for the express purpose of making trouble, the poor mother's first idea is to give it at once a relieving and discharging potion; and she puts the child under immediate sentence of death in doing so, the physic having an inflammatory influence which is the very thing to be avoided. And, on the other hand, when the child gives evidence of a diarrhœal disorder of the bowels, the poor mother flies to her medicine closet, takes down the phial of chalk mixture, and admires herself for stopping the immediate symptoms, not knowing that the fever and distress and worse ensuing symptoms are due to the effect of the chalk mixture, which prevents the system from relieving itself, and that she should have given instead an unloading and clearing dose of castor-oil. That she is deterred from giving the oil by the difficulty of making a child swallow the nauseous draught is not to be allowed in her excuse; for the child need not know what is given, and there are many ways of making it tasteless besides that of administering it in capsules; for, when given, beaten up with the white of an egg, as if for what is called "egg-nog," with some sugar and a dash of lemon juice added, or a drop of essence of peppermint, the child will think it is having some unusual indulgence granted because it does not feel well, remembering to its advantage the old nursery lines:

"Oh yes, not well; you're very sick.
I don't believe it's true.
You only want to coax mamma
To make nice things for you.'

Of course in the wilderness, on remote farms and suburbs, the mother of a family must, in spite of any danger from ignorance, keep many remedies on hand and administer them as best she can, because a physician is unattainable there at short notice. But, in that case, as much her duty as it is to have the medicines, it is to know how and when to administer them; and so she must make her own a sufficient knowledge of the simpler and more common ailments to be able to treat them properly in their preliminary stages; and this ought to be as much a part of every girl's education as bread-making, sewing, reading and the multiplication table.

But when a doctor is in the next street or within easy call, and drugs are at hand round the corner, a mother is wise who takes no more upon herself in this regard than she can not help, and contents herself until educated help can be had with making use of copious draughts of hot water and of soothing sweats.

As unwise as it is to administer other medicines in ignorance, it is to take the various patent medicines prescribed by no one in authority, and compounded of no one knows what—those things that are recommended for the "blood"—tonics, purifiers and universal cure-alls—made in reality, and as a general thing of the strongest drugs and the vilest alcohol, and capable of producing the worst results in the system, even to the inflammation of the stomach, the induration of the liver, the weakening of the heart and the degeneration of the kidneys, every one of which evils can be wrought without the patient's knowledge of what is going on until the end approaches. The youth who is "tresting" and being treated by his companions, with the idea that he is making a man of himself, has father, who is taking a "little something" for his stomach's sake before dinner, are both, even if in perfect health now, doing the same thing for their vital organs that the patent medicines are doing for those who are not in perfect health, and both customs are the result of ignorance, and should be corrected rapidly. As no one nowadays would think of taking calomel in the huge doses formerly given, and scarcely at all without a physician's order, and even then, possibly, with some doubt and questioning, so it may come to pass that in time the patent medicine and the unneeded stimulant will be looked at with similar distrust and disfavor. If one is so "poorly" as to feel the need of a stimulant, which is, after all, of but temporary relief; if one is miserable and does not know what the matter is—the only course to be pursued is to call in a practitioner whose business it is to be familiar with such affairs, and who, with patience and obedience on the part of the sufferer, will put things into as nearly right shape as it is possible they should be. We are apt to say that to call a doctor is to make ourselves ill, in accordance with the old epitaph beginning: "I was well; I wanted to be better," forgetting that it would not have occurred to us to call a doctor at all if we had not been ill already; and that, at any rate, one whose business it is to know, as it is the doctor's, is more presumably safe in the directing of such affairs than one who, like ourselves, know nothing about the way in which we are so fearfully and wonderfully made. Eternal though the life beyond the grave, there is but one life here, and that has to be lived in connection with the body; and it would seem that at the slightest hint of disaster to this so necessary body, we should put the care of it into the hands of those most skilled in such matters, and not run the risk of parting with it, or of doing it an irremediable damage.

Madam's Pretty Teeth.

In a Vine street cable-car, the other day, says the Cincinnati Times-Star, were an old gentleman with an ear-trumpet and a very pretty young woman, accompanied by a little boy. She smiled at intervals on the boy and showed her pretty teeth in a bewitching way. All at once the old man, in the way peculiar to so many deaf people who do not know how to modulate their voices, said, in tones so loud as to be audible all over the car: "I only paid five dollars for my upper teeth. What did yours cost?" To say that the pretty woman was mad is putting it mildly. She flounced around with a flush of anger blazing in her cheeks, and signaled the conductor to let her out at the next crossing.

A Highly-Paid Woman.

Louisa M. Knapp, editress of the Ladies' Home Journal, claims to receive the largest salary of any woman in America. She is paid $10,000 a year for conducting the paper under her charge, which is a publication not much over ten years of age, and has a circulation of over 500,000, a result due entirely to the ability of its talented editress. Miss Knapp, now Mrs. Curtiss, is a woman of medium height, slender, and with a face rather interesting than pretty. She is said to be a noted house-wife, and manages her handsome home as successfully as she manages her journal.

General Warehouse & Forwarding Agts.

HEPPNER, OGN.

The warehouse has two floors, 80 x 100 feet, and is well lighted, affording favorable diiplay of wools on sale. It is situated near no other buildings and bears a low rate of insurance.

Last season, this company handled over 2,000,000 pounds of wool, and in anticipation of an increased amount for the coming season, they will build an addition to the warehouse.

During the season, an experienced wool grader is employed. The warehouse being furnished with a wool compress, buyers are enabled to have their purchases put in condition for direct shipment to eastern wills at a cost much below that which the wool must bear via Portland or San Francisco.
