GRANT'S HORSEMANSHIP.

An Incident That Occurred After the Battle of Port Hudson.

"Speaking of General Grant's fine horsemanship," said General N. P. Banks to a New York Tribune reporter, "reminds me of an incident that occurred soon after the battle of Port Hudson, in which he gave me the race of my life. General Grant paid the army under my command a visit at the period mentioned and was asked to review it. He came without any horses, and I loaned him for the occasion the magnificent bay parade horse which the leading citizens of Massachusetts presented to me when I went to the front. All of my old soldiers will remember that bay horse. I rode on the other, a thoroughbred black mare, and was in a constant state of anxiety lest the bay would run away with me when I came up. Well, the troops were drawn up in line and we rode down the line at a slow pace, but when we reached the rear Lieut. Grant suddenly put the bay at his utmost speed, and as he was nearly thoroughbred he could run. Grant sat on the bay as if he was part of him, but the difficulty I found myself in was not to keep up at the regulation distance, but to prevent my animal from distancing the General and running off with me. Grant rode like a demon and I after him until the review was finished, the troops in the meantime watching the scene with interest mingled with astonishment. For some days afterward the troops were talking of the event and, as far as I can learn, never settled the question as to whether it was a horse-race or a military review."

"While on the subject of horses," continued the General, "the two animals that I took with me into the field at the outbreak of the civil war survived all of the campaigns in which I was engaged. When I returned to civil pursuits I took my horses back to Massachusetts with me and kept the faithful animals until they died. The bay horse which I have mentioned I rarely used except on parade or in an emergency. He was too noble to risk his life on the field of battle. I usually rode another bay in battle, a big, powerful and zealous animal. He was wounded on several occasions, but none of the wounds seemed to be serious enough to incapacitate him for active service. I rode him at the battle of Cedar Mountain."

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL'S sister, Mrs. Putnam, of Boston, is noted as a linguist, and is the author of some very able papers on Polish and Hungarian literature. She has also written a dramatic poem. Mrs. Putnam was born in 1816, and is nine years older than her distinguished brother.

Spreading for Leagues Around

unceasingly, overflowed lands, sunken lots and half submerged river banks, which give birth, the seeds of malaria impregnate the air, and are inhaled at every breath by thousands unprovided with any adequate safeguard against the baneful influence. Yet physicians of skill and experience, alike to remedy or to prevent, pure in its constituents, and the professionally recognized substitute for the hated drug, quinine. Its name is Hostetter's Bitters, a family specific and safeguard not only as an antidote to malaria but as a means of permanently invigorating the system, and relieving constipation, kidney complaint, rheumatism, kidney bladder ailments, and nervousness, it invigorates it takes the first place. Also a superb appetizer. Use it systematically.
