CLAPPING THE HANDS.

A Mode of Salutation Among Savage African Tribes.

Among the Uvinza, "when two 'grandees' meet, the junior leans forward, bends his knees and places the palms of his hands on the ground on each side of his feet, while the senior claps his own hands six or seven times. They then change round, and the junior slaps himself first under the left armpit and then under the right. But when a 'swell' meets an inferior the superior only claps hands, and does not fully return the salutation by following the motions of the one who first salutes. On two commoners meeting they pat their stomachs, then clap hands at each other, and finally shake (i. e., take) hands. These greetings are observed to an unlimited extent, and the sound of patting and clapping is almost unceasing." Serpa Pinto found this ceremonial clapping in violent exercise among the Ambuellas. Paul du Chaillu reports the salute of the Ishogos to be clapping the hands together and stretching them out alternately several times. Among the Walunga in the morning on every side a continuous clapping of hands goes on with the accompaniment of "Kwi-tata, kwi-tata?" which is their mode of saying: "How d'ye do?" If a chief passes they drop on their knees, bow their heads to the ground, clap vigorously and humbly mutter: "Kwi-tata, Kwi-tata?" The clapping distinguishes the ceremony from that of mere prostration.—Col. Garrick Mallery, in Popular Science Monthly.

Lucky for the Mice.

A traveler mentions that, in crossing a plain in Africa, far distant from any stream of water, where no cool shade refreshed him, and as far as the eye could reach, nothing could be seen but heaps of sand, he met with many creeping plants of luxurious vegetation. They were covered with large berries, each berry containing nearly as much as three teaspoonfuls of water. On inspecting them more closely, he was astonished and delighted to observe a number of mice, the only inhabitants of that inhospitable spot, busily employed in nibbling off the berries and carrying them to their homes, as seamen would carry casks of water to ships.—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. F. Bear, keeper of the Glendale National Cemetery, near Richmond, has a desk, made in 1649, which has been in possession of the Bear family of England. It is said to have been used by Oliver Cromwell in 1647-48, when fighting Charles I. It is of antique oak, beautifully carved and highly polished.

Mr. John Noble, the English millionaire, wire-rope manufacturer, provided in his will for an annual income to his son, Mr. William Noble, the present member of parliament for Hastings, with the proviso that £5,000 a year shall at once be struck off if he should fail to be returned.

In the state paper office at London there is a copy, perhaps the only one extant, of a folio newspaper sheet "Public Occurrences," printed at Boston and bearing date September 25, 1690, to be issued monthly or oftener, and printed by R. Pierse for Benjamin Harris at the London coffee house. 1690

Through the Weary Hours

Of many a night, made doubly long by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His malady is one which ordinary medicines too often fail to relieve, but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, affords the rheumatic reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the first premonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, and avoid years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active influence of the Bitters upon this malady, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a protracted systematic trial, and should not be abandoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacious in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases.
