Recreational Institute Held By Local M.I.A.

W. O. Robinson, of Salt Lake City, Instructs Stake and Ward Officers of District.

W. O. Robinson, member of the general board of the Mutual Improvement association of the Latter Day Saints church, was in La Grande Wednesday and Thursday of this week from Salt Lake City, Utah, and held a recreational institute with M. I. A. officers and teachers here.

On Wednesday night about 100 stake and ward recreational officers from Baker, Union, Cove, Enterprise, Elgin and La Grande attended the meeting, and on Thursday evening the institute was open to all stake ward M. I. A. and auxiliary organization officers and members of the regular M. I. A. recreational committee. About 150 persons were present for the second night of the institute.

Recreation Instruction.

The purpose of the institute was to instruct M. I. A. and auxiliary leaders here in wholesale recreation for both old and young.

Robinson, who had charge of recreation at Salt Air at Salt Lake for several years and was a former professor in the agricultural college at Logan, Utah, introduced many new ideas. He was also formerly a dancing master and outlined several new steps.

He left here on the early morning train returning to his home in Salt Lake. He plans to stop off at Idaho points en route.

HEALTH

WHY DO I LIVED TO BE A HUNDRED?

By J. E. Miller, M. D.

Lexington, Ky.

Member Georgia Homeopathic Institute.

Why did he live to be a hundred?

Frequently you read in the papers of some elderly person who attributes his long life to abstemious habits, to a peculiar mode of living or to some bizarre procedure. And with equal frequency you hear of one who suggests a view diametrically opposed.

Was the latter as much good as the former? Certainly! For he, too, has lived to be a hundred. The contention, amounting to an axiom, would seem to negate the necessity of life a great deal if it were to get most. The abstainer would from his point of view, similarly cut short his allotted span of life if he were to indulge in smoking, and the physical culture devotee would do young if he failed to practice his particular brand of exercise.

Some years ago a Boston newspaper presented a case to the school men in every Massachusetts town and then published a daily selection with each of these individuals in which the case presented gave the personal message for old age.

They were extremely enlightening. The man in Monday's article lived to be 74 because he never slept less than 10 hours a night. On Tuesday he was triumphed by an 11-year-old who never slept over six hours of 24.

The man interviewed on Wednesday attributed his 94 years to the fact that he never smoked, while the Thursday paper states that the man who lived to be 75 years and was an inveterate smoker.

If one does not become so confused by such conflicting statements and notions that he is disgusted with all formulas for old age he is indeed fortunate. But when he begins to realize that these isolated cases have not lived because of what they did, but in spite of it and that "what's one man's meat is another's poison" he is well on the road to a solution of the problem. It is extremely unfortunate to fill the minds of our youths with these untruths or half truths, for in them we should be pointing out the scientific facts that they may conduct themselves accordingly.

The idea that "we are all born free" may still be a subject for academic discussion but that we are all born "equal" no longer lends itself to debate. The mere fact that we all differ outwardly, one from another, indicates that there are fundamental internal differences.

It is because of such external differences that we distinguish our friends, and persons who resemble each other closely are remarked upon, because it is such an unusual phenomenon.

The adult individual is made up of two separate and distinct parts, the inherited constitution and the acquired constitution. Each individual is a product of his inheritance and environment which is rather more tersely put in the old saw:

This is why a mental strain that would unbalance one individual might have no effect on another person; or why one lived to the age of 23 from tuberculosis and his weaker appearing brother, who may be even less careful of his health, lives to a ripe old age.

This interesting factor complicates the whole problem of prognosticating the span of life. We are certain, however, that keeping the body in first class condition adds many years to the average.
