WALLOWA COUNTY PIONEERS MEET

Dan W. Sheahan, Enterprise Attorney, Elected New President

ENTERPRISE, Ore., Aug. 19 (Special)—Dan W. Sheahan, Enterprise attorney, and for the past 40 years a resident of Wallowa county, was elected president of the Wallowa County Pioneer association at the 1927 annual meeting, reunion and picnic of the group held Friday, August 12, at Wallowa lake.

Mrs. Cora A. Wade, Enterprise, was re-elected vice-president of the organization, and David H. Rees, Enterprise, became secretary-treasurer to succeed John McDonald, of Wallowa.

J. F. Mendenhall, of La Grande, former president of the association, presided during the meeting.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the attendance of Jim Tully, Wallowa, and J. A. Masterson, Elgin, first settlers in Wallowa county, who came here in '71-'72.

The program of the afternoon was opened by the singing of a group of old songs by a number of Wallowa county women. Included among them, who spoke were: J. A. Masterson, Elgin; Jim Tully, Wallowa; Henry Oliver, Wallowa; Ed Cokely, La Grande; Jim Chinn-ie, Mrs. Elsie Collins, Cove; M. V. Knight, Joseph.

M. V. Knight, of Joseph, was appointed at the meeting to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Sheahan on the historical committee when he became president of the association. Harley Horner, Enterprise; Mrs. Dolly Pearce and Gusie Crow, Lostine, compose the rest of the personnel of the committee.

TORTOISE WINS AGAIN

SAUGUS, Mass.—A tortoise was "arrested" here by a motorcycle patrolman, but got away. The reptile, a 20-pounder, became cautious half way across a busy turnpike and "parked" in the middle holding up traffic. The patrolman captured the traffic law violator with ease, lugged it to the police station, and locked it in a cell. When the police looked for the prisoner later it had disappeared, probably under the bars of the cell.

Machine Shows Heredity As It Applies to Cows

WASHINGTON (AP)—Heredity, that process by which dominant characteristics of the forebear may be transmitted to progeny, is mechanically demonstrated at the federal bureau of animal industry.

R. R. Graves, a scientist, invented the contrivance to penetrate the Mendelian theory of heredity in dairy cattle. He calls it an "herediscope," so built that it presents concretely the fundamental principles of inheritance in animal, plant and human life.

The machine resembles of a number of groups of aluminum cups and connecting tubes, each group representing an individual animal. They are arranged in pedigree form showing three generations—four grandparents, two parents and one offspring.

Numerous small, colored balls, each representing a given hereditary character, such as the "factor for milk production of butterfat," are placed at random in the cups of the starting generation. When the operator presses a trigger connected with the mechanism, half of the character symbols from each parent cup are transmitted to the offspring, the selection of characters being merely by chance, as in the case of actual mating.

"By repetition of mechanical 'mating,' Graves explains, "the observer seeks to understand how certain characters may be transmitted from generation to generation, or lost entirely in the process, how they may be present in an individual but obscured by more dominant characters, and how, in the absence of dominant characters they may again appear.

"The machine will illustrate, for our purpose, transmission and recombination of four separate characters, or the transmission of four multiple factors, in such types of inheritance as milk yield, stature, and other quantitative characters."

NEWARK, N. J. (AP)—County politics must not be made a playground or a training school for women seeking to embark on a political career, warns Mrs. Elizabeth A. Harris, a member of the board of Freeholders of Essex county.

"The jobs are too hard and exacting for that," she contends, holding that for county politics a woman candidate should be a person of mature judgment, preferably married, and "she must have courage."

Paris Latin Quarter Goes Blonde As Nordics Invade Montparnasse

PARIS (AP)—The far-famed Darkhaired Latin Quarter is going blonde.

The fair-haired element is becoming so conspicuous on the Montparnasse that Parisians are beginning to talk about a northern invasion. What the Nordics lack in numbers they make up in noise and energy.

Brunettes still outnumber blondes in the old student quarter around the Sorbonne, where most of the serious study goes on, but over in the modern Bohemia, the hill of Montparnasse, most of the loafers and workers on the boulevards and the cafes trail down to dawn are Americans, English, German, Russians and Scandinavian. Only the French are missing in the cosmopolitan crowd. The only Frenchmen to be seen are the waiters.

"The principal occupation of the Nordics," The Bonnesoirs, Paris magazine, says, "is sitting.

"Beyond question the world's records, professional as well as amateur, for just plain sitting are held by modern Montparnassians. Your expert local sitter, of any sex, can get planted firmly on a cafe chair or bar stool right after lunch, and sit it out until 2 o'clock in the morning, without consuming over three or four drinks or coffees."

Practically every nation except the French is represented in the Montparnasse locality by a national eating and drinking rendezvous. Even the Chinese have a chop suey place. The descendants of the Vikings keep the night alive at their own Scandinavian restaurant. The Australians have a bar of their own, although they do not patronize it exclusively. Russians have many cafes and restaurants from which to choose. There are German, Danish and many American eating and meeting places. The Irish eat and drink impartially where hospitality offers.

The national costume of the true Montparnassian is the beret. No matter what decks the area below the neck, the space above it sports the tight tam that Borotra, the Bounding Basque tennis player and his countrymen have made famous. Most of the berets are dark blue, the color which best sets off golden and red hair.

MISS STINNES' TEARS CONVINCE TURKISH COPS

BERLIN (AP)—On her automobile tour of the world, Clairemore Stinnes is the only daughter of the venture from Constantinople. Miss Stinnes is the only daughter of the late German magnate, Hugo Stinnes.

Before Miss Stinnes and her companions could cross the Bosphorus they were held up by the Turkish authorities for four days for having committed the "crime" of in advertently entering the so called military zone. Miss Stinnes was placed under a military escort and her two cars, all her belongings and her dog were attached by the police.

When all arguments and entreaties failed, Miss Stinnes resorted to tears, which did the trick. The Turkish authorities were suddenly convinced that she was not a spy. They restored her cars and other properties and gave her a huge bouquet of roses.

GERMAN PLANES CARRY GUINEA PIGS AND DOGS

BERLIN (AP)—Dogs, song birds, white mice and even guinea pigs were among the passengers carried in recent weeks by the Luft-Hansa, the German airways company.

The guinea pigs probably hold the long distance record. Twenty-five of them were hurriedly ordered from the Berlin zoo by the Turkish Agricultural Institute at Angora. They were placed in the regular plane flying from Berlin to Budapest, were transferred to a plane between Budapest and Constantinople and finally were shipped by railway express from Constantinople to Angora.

Expensive dogs are frequently shipped by airplane to London or Paris or even to Moscow. They are found to suffer less in transit by the quick air route than by railway express.

The plane plying between Berlin and the Harz mountains is the chief carrier of song birds.
