A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Al Nash and John McVey Killed By an Engine Yesterday Morning.

At 3 o'clock yesterday (Sunday) morning Al Nash, yard-master of the O. R. & N. at this place, and John McVey, switchman, were run over and killed by switch engine No. 49. An inquest was held at 10 o'clock which brought out the following facts:

Freight train No 21 came in from the east and ran in on the side track known as No. 1, while the switch engine attached to a caboose was in the yards running east on the main line with John McVey, Al Nash, the two men that were killed, and T. Jackson, another switchman riding on the foot board in front of the engine which was traveling about six miles an hour. The freight train had on forty cars and when nearing the western junction of the side track with the main line, the engineer was stopped and was in the act of backing his engine to have it uncoupled from the train when the switch engine approached. The driver of the switch engine supposed everything was safe, as the man on the head of his engine gave him the signal to come ahead, but the freight engine was not clear of the main track and the engines collided, throwing McVey and Nash under the moving engine who, unfortunately, were on the side between the two locomotives, while Switchman Jackson, who was standing on the opposite side of the foot board, escaped unhurt.

McVey was run over across the loins and Nash had his right leg crushed so that the fractured bones protruded; his left leg and foot were badly cut, his abdomen fatally bruised and his face cut and bruised. Both men were pinned under the heavy locomotive and it was with difficulty that their mashed limbs could be arranged so the engine could be backed without inflicting more injury. The cries of the poor fellows for opiates to relieve their intense suffering were pitiful in the extreme. Drs. Logan and Gellendorffer, the company's physicians, soon arrived and amputated Nash's right leg, but he died in about four hours, while McVey died soon after the accident.

Al Nash was about 40 years old and had been in the employ of the O. R. & N. Co. as yard master about eight months, coming here from Salem where he resided for a long time previously. He leaves a wife and one child. John McVey's home was in Colorado. He was about 25 years of age and unmarried.

The inquest yesterday lasted from 10 a. m. till 8 p. m. The verdict of the jury is as follows:

We, the undersigned, the jury, summoned by W. H. Butts, coroner of Wasco county, Oregon, to inquire into the cause of the death of the body now before us, after hearing the evidence in the case, find the following facts:

That the name of the deceased is Al Nash, whose age is about 48 years, and who resided in The Dalles and was an employe of the O. R. & N. Co. in the capacity of yard-master of said company.

That on the 4th day of November, 1900, at the hour of 3 o'clock a. m. of said day, in said yards, in said city, county and state, and while in the employ of said company as said yard-master, being on the foot board on the front of engine No. 49, when said engine 49 collided with engine No. 106, of train No. 21, which engine No. 106 was on side track No 1, in said yards, and partly overlapping on the main line, upon which was traveling said engine No. 49, and by reason of which overlapping of said engine and the approach of said engine No. 49, said collision occurred, the said Al Nash then and there being, was injured by being thrown off engine No. 49 and under the wheels thereof, and was injured about his head, his right leg being cut off and his left leg and foot being incised, and his abdomen being bruised, and from which injuries the said Al Nash died, about the hour of 7 o'clock, Nov. 4, 1900, in said Dalles City.

That the said deceased came to his death through and by reason of the carelessness of some person or persons, but whom this jury is unable to determine.
